[Ital.] .. that the word is Italian.
[Lat.] .. that the word is Latin.
[Pers.] .. that the word is Persian.
[Span.] .. that the word is Spanish.

In the Etymological Lists which follow the Grammar, at the commencement of this "Treasury," will be found extensive illustrations of the derivation and formation of such English words as are not taken unchanged from other languages; and to them we refer the Reader who is desirous of information on that subject.

* * It must be observed that in this Dictionary the spelling and accentuation which are sanctioned at the present time by the best usage, alone, are given; except in the case of a few words, which still appear in good writers, with slight variations of form. In these instances all the forms are given, either together, or (if they differ widely from each other) apart, in the alphabetical arrangement.

Participial forms are inserted only when they are employed as adjectives, with meanings not immediately derived from the significations of their verbs.

ZEAL WITHOUT MECKNESS IS LIKE A SHIP AT SEA, IN DANGER OF EVERY RISING STORM.

GENERAL DIRECTIONS FOR THE PRONUNCIATION OF WORDS.

•• See also the remarks under each letter in this Dictionary.

RULE I. The accent (') marks the syllable on which the principal stress of the voice is to be laid.

II. When the accent is placed immediately after a vowel, as in fa'mous, le'ver, mi'ndful, no'ble, pu'gilist, cy'press, it denotes that the vowel has a long sound; but when placed immediately after a consonant, as in fam'ish, lev'el, mil'itary, nom'inal, pun'ish, syr'inge, it indicates that the sound of the vowel is short; except before tion, where the accent has been invariably placed so as to mark the peculiar pronunciation of that syllable.

III. In long diphthongs, the accent is placed immediately after the vowel which determines the sound, as in belie've, rece'ive.

IV. C before a, o, and u, is sounded like k, as catch, come, cup;—before, e, i, and y, its sound is like that of s; as ce'dar, cit'ron, cyl'inder.

V. E final generally indicates that the preceding vowel is long, as in hate, scene, mice, robe, rude, lyre; but in glove, live, give, &c., the preceding vowel is short. In words ending in le, the final e is silent; able being pronounced a'bl, &c.

VI. Gh at the beginning of words represent the hard g, as in ghostly; but they are usually silent both in the middle and at the end of words; as in bought, right, through, sigh. In some words they are sounded like f, as in cough, trough, enough.

VII. There are several consonants which in certain situations are quite mute; as, for example, g before n, in gnaw, sign, pronounced naw, sine—k before n, as in know, knit, pronounced no, nit—l before k and d, as in walk, talk, could, would, pronounced wauk, tauik, cood, wood—b before t and after m, as in debt, pronounced det, and dumb, pronounced dum—h after r, as in rhyme, pronounced rime—n after m, at the end of a syllable, as in hymn, condemn, pronounced him, condem—p before s and t, as in psalm, Ptolemy, pronounced sahm, tolemy—and w before r, as in wring, wreath, pronounced ring, reath.

VIII. Wh at the beginning of a word are pronounced as if their position was reversed; as in what, whiff, which are pronounced hwat, hwiff. In a few instances, however, the sound of the w is wholly lost; as in who, whom, whole, which are pronounced hoo, hoom, hole.

IX. The termination ous has the sound of us in such words as gracious, glorious, pompous, precious.

X. Ci and ti, before a vowel, have the sound of sh; as in audacious, motion, pronounced audashus, moshun.

N.B. Throughout the Dictionary, s. signifies, a substantive or noun; a. an adjective; pron. a pronoun; v. a. a verb active; v. n. a verb intransitive; v. a verb both active and intransitive; prep. a preposition; ad. an adverb; conj. a conjunction; and interj. an interjection.

Abalak, a town of Siberia, gov. of Tobolsk; famous for an image of the Virgin, visited by numerous pilgrims.

Abancay, a town of Peru, in the province of Cuzco, on a river of the same name. Lon. 73.10 W., lat. 13.13 S.

Abano, or Albano, a town of Austrian Italy, near Padua, famous for its warm baths, and a certain kind of mud, to which medicinal virtues are attributed. Pop. 3000.

Abassia, Abascia, or Abkasia, a country of Western Asia, lying along the south-western declivities of Mount Caucasus and the adjacent shores of the Black Sea. It is under the nominal dominion of Russia, but the forts which had been erected by that power were either destroyed or abandoned during the Anglo-French and Russian war of 1855-6. The soil is fertile, producing grain, grapes, and other fruits; the natives seem of a different origin from that of the neighbouring tribes, and their language is essentially different from any Asiatic dialect known.

Abb, a town of Yemen, in Arabia. Lon. 44.15 E., lat. 14 N. Pop. 5000.

Abbeokouta, a town of Western Africa, the principal place in the kingdom of Yarriba, on the Guinea coast, and said to have 80,000 inhabitants. The surrounding country is fertile and cultivated. Lon. 3.30 E., lat. 7.8 N.

Abbeville, a town in the NW. of France, on the banks of the river Somme, and in the dep. of that name, distinguished for its manufactures of woollen cloth, canvass, carpets, and soap. Pop. 19,000.—A county of S. Carolina, U. S., with a chief town of the same name.

Abbiategrosso, a fortified town near Milan, in Italy. Pop. 4600.

Abbotsbury, a village in Dorsetshire. Pop. 1077.

Abbots Langley, a village in Hertfordshire, near St. Albans, famous as the birth-place of Nicholas Breakspeare, or Adrian IV., the only Englishman that ever became Pope.

Aberconway. See Conway.

Abercorn, a small town in Scotland, near the Firth of Forth.

Aberdare, a town in the mining district of Glamorgan, S. Wales. Pop. 86,112.

Aberdeen, a sea-port of Scotland, the capital of Aberdeenshire, situate on an eminence, near the mouth of the Dee, 127 miles NNE. of Edinburgh; and the principal city in Scotland north of the Forth. New Aberdeen contains the well-known Marischal College, and several eminent schools. King's College, which is the most ancient, stands in the old town. Besides the coasting trade, vessels are sent hence to Greenland, the Baltic, the Levant, and the West Indies. The chief manufactures are woollen, linen, and cotton, printed goods, thread, and all the materials for ship-building. Pop. 88,125.

Aberdeen, Old, or Aberdon, a borough of Scotland, on the south bank of the Don, a mile north of New Aberdeen. On the sea-coast is a fort, and the remains of the castle destroyed by Cromwell.

Aberdeenshire, a county of Scotland, 86 miles long, and 48 broad. It contains 1,260,800 acres, and is divided into 88 parishes. Here are quarries of granite, millstone, and limestone, and veins of manganese and plumbago. The principal rivers are the Dee, Don, Ythan, Doveran, and Bogie, which abound with excellent salmon. Pop. 244,607.

Aberdour, a fishing-town of Fifeshire, on the Firth of Forth.

Aberford, a town in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, 9 miles NE. of Leeds. Pop. 1009.

Aberfraw, a town of Anglesey, Wales; the principal trade of which is in flannels, manufactured in the neighbourhood. Pop. 1238.

Abergavenny, a town in Monmouthshire, with extensive iron-works in the vicinity. Pop. 4800.

Abergwilly, a village of Wales, near Caermarthen, in which is the palace of the Bishop of St. David. Pop. 2675.

Abernethy, a village of Scotland, on the Tay, formerly the seat of the Pictish kings.

Aberystwith, a sea-port town of Cardiganshire, S. Wales. It has manufactures of flannel and stockings, and a considerable fishery; in the neighbourhood are silver and lead mines. Pop. 6892.

Abiad, Bahr el. See Nile.

Abingdon, a borough in Berkshire, on the banks of the Thames, near Oxford. Pop. 5799. — A town of Maryland, U. S.

Abipones, a warlike tribe of Indians, inhabiting the country called El-Gran-Chaco, in South America. They live chiefly by hunting, and reside in islands or on the tops of trees, during the five winter months, when their country is inundated; they eat the flesh of tigers, imagining that it imparts to them strength and courage.

Abo, a sea-port belonging to Russia, and the ancient capital of Finland. The inhabitants export coarse linen, grain, furs, pitch, and iron, but their principal trade is in timber. Abo was taken from the Swedes by the Russians in 1808. Pop. 12,000.

Abok, a town of Western Africa, on the river Niger, 130 miles above its mouth. It contains from 800 to 1000 houses.

Abomey, the capital of the kingdom of Dahomey, on the Guinea coast of Africa. Pop. about 25,000.

Aboukir, a castle, island, and bay, on the coast of Egypt, to the west of the Rosetta mouth of the Nile. The bay is famous for the defeat and destruction of the French fleet, by Nelson, in 1798; here, also, the British army, under Sir Ralph Abercrombie, landed in 1801. The town of Aboukir is the ancient Canopus, and is about 10 miles NE. of Alexandria.

Abrantes, a fortified town of Portugal, on the Tajo; prov. of Estremadura. It was here that the French were so gallantly resisted in 1809 by Sir A. Wellesley.

Abruzzo, a province of Italy, divided into two parts by the river Pescara; one called Ultra, the other Citra. This country is fertile in corn, rice, fruit, and saffron; but is principally mountainous, being traversed in its whole extent by the Apennines, and has some of their highest summits, Monte Vellino being 8397 feet above the level of the sea.

Abu Arish, a town of Arabia, near the E. shore of the Red Sea; cap. of a petty state of the same name. Lon. 42.20 E, lat. 16.40 N. Pop. about 8000.

Abury, or Avebury, a village of Wilts, near Marlborough, famous for its vast Druidical remains.

Abydos, an ancient city of Asia Minor, on the E. shore of the Hellespont, or Dardanelles. Abydos is celebrated in ancient history for the desperate resistance it made to Philip of Macedon, who took it; but its chief fame is derived from the story of the loves of Hero and Leander. The village of Aidos, or Avido, occupies its site.

Abyssinia (or Habesh), an extensive country of Eastern Africa, probably embracing an area of not less than 200,000 sq. m., but the precise limits of which are variously stated. The Bahr-el-Azrek (or Blue Nile, as the eastern arm of the Nile is called) rises within its limits. The country is mountainous, but in the vales the soil is fertile. The rainy season continues from April to September, and is succeeded by a cloudless sky and a vertical sun; but cold nights follow these scorching days. No country in the world produces a greater variety of quadrupeds, both wild and tame. The religion of the country is a mixture of Judaism and of the Christianity of the Greek Church; and the language bears a great affinity to the Arabic. The Abyssinians are of a dark olive complexion; their dress is a light robe, bound with a sash, and the head covered with a turban. Many of their habits and usages are of the most barbarous description, one of the most revolting being the practice of eating raw flesh, while yet warm and quivering with life, at their feasts. Abyssinia was formerly a powerful kingdom, ruled by a negus, or emperor, but has since the 16th century been overrun by Moslem and Galla invaders. It has at times formed several distinct states, known as the kingdoms of Tigre, Amhara, and Shoa. Recently, however, the ruler of Amhara appears to have acquired supreme ascendancy, and Gondar has again become the metropolis. The chief rivers of Abyssinia are the Blue Nile and the Tecazze. The exports consist of gold, ivory, and slaves. Pop. between three and four millions.

Acajutla, a port of Central America, on the coast of the Pacific, and within the republic of Salvador.

Acapulco, a city of Mexico, on the Pacific Ocean, with a large and commodious harbour, defended by a castle. It was from this port that the rich Spanish galleons of former days took their departure to spread the wealth of the Western over the Eastern world. Since that time Acapulco has greatly declined in size and importance. Pop. 3000.

Accra, a trading station on the Gold Coast of Africa, at which both the English and the Dutch maintain a settlement. It is 75 m. to the eastward of Cape Coast Castle.

Acerenza, a small but ancient city of S. Italy, prov. Basilicata. It was regarded by the Romans as one of the bulwarks of Apulia and Lucania. Pop. 3600.

Acerra, a very ancient Italian town, 9 m. NE. of Naples. Pop. 6300.

THE WISE MAN KNOWS HE KNOWS NOTHING; THE FOOL THINKS HE KNOWS ALL.

THE FRIAR PREACHED AGAINST STEALING WHEN HE HAD A PUDDING IN HIS SLEEVE.

Acheen, a principality in the NW. part of Sumatra; the chief products of which are tropical fruits, rice, cotton, gold-dust, and sulphur. The Achenese are taller, stouter, and darker-complexioned than the other Sumatrans; they are expert navigators. They are Mahomedans. The capital of the above principality is situated near its NW. extremity, and has 36,000 inhab.

Achern, a town of Baden. P. about 3000.

Achill Island, an island lying off the W. coast of Ireland, county of Mayo, and on the N. side of the entrance to Clew Bay.

Achmin, or Ekhmin, a town of Upper Egypt, the ancient Chemmis, or Panopolis. Pop. 3000.

Achmunein (or Eshmounein), a large village of Middle Egypt, situated on the left bank of the Nile, above Minieh, and on the site of the ancient Hermopolis. The ruins of a temple in its neighbourhood are regarded as some of the finest remains of Egyptian architecture.

Achonry, a town of Ireland, on the Shannon. It is 16 m. WSW. of Sligo. Pop. of parish, 15,357.

Achray, a small but picturesque lake in the Scotch highlands, within the county of Perth.

Aci-Reale, a sea-port town of Sicily, at the foot of Mount Etna. Pop. about 15,000.

Acken, a town and castle in Prussia, on the Elbe, 22 m. SE. of Magdeburg.

Aconcagua, a town of Chili, cap. of a prov. of the same name. Pop. about 5000.

—A mountain near the eastern border of the province of that name, and the highest summit of the Andes, rising to 23,944 feet above the sea.

Acqs, a town of France, in the department of Arriege, noted for its hot springs.

Acqua, a village of Tuscany, celebrated for its hot baths.

Acquapendente, a small town in the Papal States. Pop. 3000.

Acquaria, a town of Italy, near Modena; famous for its medicinal waters.

Acqua-Viva, a town of Naples. Pop. 5300.

Acqui, or Aqui, a town of Sardinia, cap. of prov. same name. It is celebrated for its warm sulphureous baths. Pop. 6700.

Acre, Akka, or St. Jean d'Acre, a city of Syria, upon the sea-coast of Palestine, and situated 82 miles to the N. by W. of Jerusalem. It is the ancient Ptolemais, and stands on a plain, near the mouth of the Kardanah, or ancient Belus. Its port has been at all times the key to Palestine; and, though now a bad one, is better than any other along the coast. The chief articles of commerce are cotton, cattle, corn, olives, and linseed, and rice brought from Egypt. In the time of the crusades, Acre underwent several sieges; and little is now to be seen of the ancient city. In 1799, Acre withstood a siege by the French under Buonaparte, who retreated after failing in a twelfth assault. During its siege by Ibrahim Pacha in 1832, its public buildings and fortifications were mostly destroyed; but it was afterwards repaired, and the latter rendered stronger than ever. In 1841, however, it was bombarded by the allied British and Turkish fleets, when the powder magazine was exploded, and the greater part of the town either injured or destroyed. Acre has since recovered in great measure from the effect of these calamities, and is now again the strongest city in the country, with a population of 5000.

Adalia, or Satalieh, a sea-port town of Turkey in Asia; it occupies the site of the ancient Attaleia, a city of Pamphylia.

Adamawa, an extensive and fertile country of Central Africa, watered by the upper course of the river Chadda (or Benue), which joins the Niger. It contains rich pasture-grounds, with vast numbers of cattle. The capital is called Yola.

Adam's Peak, a conspicuous mountain in Ceylon, of conical form, and rising to 7420 feet above the sea.

Adana, a town of Asia Minor, on the river Seihoon, and the capital of a pashalic. Pop. 10,000.

Adda, a river that rises in Switzerland, in the Grisons, runs through the Valteline and the Lake of Como, and joins the Po, near Cremona.

Adel, or Adaiel, a kingdom of Eastern Africa, formerly a province of Abyssinia. It extends along the western shores of the Red Sea and the Gulf of Aden for a distance of about 150 miles. The country is generally naked and barren, but includes fertile tracts which produce wheat, millet, frankincense, and pepper.

Adelaide, the capital city of South Australia, stands on the banks of the little river Torrens, at a distance of 4 miles from the eastern shore of St. Vincent's Gulf (lat. 34.55 S., lon. 138.28 E.). Adelaide was founded in 1836, and contained in 1871 upwards of 27,000 inhabitants. A railway connects the city with Port Adelaide, on the shore of the Gulf, at a distance of 8 miles to the NW. The streets of Adelaide are broad and regular, the houses well-built, and the general aspect of the city is indicative of the commercial industry and prosperity of its inhabitants. Good roads extend into the interior of the colony in either direction. The famous "Burra-Burra" copper-mine is about 90 miles to the northward of Adelaide.

Adelfors, a town in Sweden, noted for its gold mines.

Adelie Land, a tract of coast discovered in the Southern Polar Sea, under the line of the Antarctic Circle, and crossed by the meridian of 140 East.

Adelsberg, an extraordinary cavern, in Illyria. It has been explored to a distance of between one and two miles. Stalactite pervades almost every part of the cavern.

Aden, a sea-port town of Arabia, within the district of Yemen. Lon. 45.8 E., lat. 12.45 N. This town, or one occupying its site, was known to the Greeks as the channel through which the treasures of India were conveyed to the coast of Egypt. It was ceded, in 1839, to the E. I. Company, and is used as a station for the steam-packets that navigate the Indian Ocean, in connexion with the "over-land" route to India. Pop. upwards of 40,000.

Adige, a large river of Italy, deriving its source in the Rhætian Alps, and entering the Adriatic Sea to the northward of the Po.

Adlington, a village of Kent, near Hythe; famed as the place where Elizabeth Barton, called the Holy Maid of Kent, practised her deceptions, in 1534.

Admiralty Islands, a cluster of Islands in the Pacific Ocean, to the WNW. of New Ireland. Lon. 149.44 E., lat. 2.28 S.

Adoni, a town of Hindoostan, in Balagaut. In 1787 it was taken and destroyed by Tippoo Saib. Lon. 77.15 E., lat. 15.35 N.

Adour, a river of France, rising in the department of the Upper Pyrenees, and entering the Bay of Biscay, below Bayonne.

Adowa, a town of Abyssinia, cap. of Tigré. Pop. about 8000.

Adra, a sea-port of Spain, situated near the mouth of the Adra. It is 45 m. SE. of Granada.

Adramyti, a town of Asiatic Turkey, on the W. coast of Anatolia, 80 m. N. of Smyrna. Pop. 5000.

Adria, a town of North Italy, which gives name to the Adriatic Sea, on the shore of which it originally stood, though now 15 m. inland; it was formerly of greater note than at present. Pop. 10,400.

Adrianople, a city of European Turkey, the see of an archbishop, and formerly the European seat of the Turkish dominion. It is eight miles in circuit, situate in the midst of an extensive plain on the river Maritza. Its commerce is considerable. It was taken from the Greeks by the Turks in 1350, and continued to be the seat of their empire till the capture of Constantinople in 1453. Mahomet II., one of the most remarkable of the Turkish sultans, and the one who took Constantinople, was born here in 1430. Pop. about 100,000.

Adriatic Sea, an arm of the Mediterranean, which stretches to the northward between the shores of Italy on the one side and those of Dalmatia and Albania on the other. The Adriatic embraces, at its upper extremity, the Gulfs of Venice, Trieste, and Fiume (or Quarnero). A chain of long and narrow islands stretches along a portion of its eastern shores; upon this side, the land is generally high and rocky. The western shores are for the most part low, and the navigation often rendered dangerous by shallows and sand-banks. The channel of Otranto connects the Adriatic with the waters of the open Mediterranean.

Adventure Bay, an extensive arm of the sea off the S. E. coast of Tasmania, or Van Diemen's Land.

Affghanistan, an inland country of Asia, situated between India and Persia in the directions of E. and W., and between Turkestan and Beloochistan in those of N. and S. Its linear extent, in the former, is about 500 miles; in the latter, upwards of 400, the area comprised within its limits amounting to 220,000 sq. m. Great part of the country constitutes a rugged mountain-region, which rises towards the N. E. into the snow-covered peaks of the Hindoo-Koosh. Elsewhere, however, there are extensive and watered plains; in the extreme S. W. is the desert of Seistan, an extensive sandy waste. The descent from the high plateau of Affghanistan to the plains that border on the Indus is through deep and narrow mountain-defiles, the two most important of which are the Khyber and Bolan passes—the great roads by which India is approached from the westward. The principal rivers are the Caubool, which joins the Indus, and the Helmund, which flows (in a S. W. direction) into the large interior lake, or morass, of Zurrah. The climate is subject to great extremes, exhibiting an intense degree of summer heat, with a corresponding intensity of cold at the opposite period of the year. The Affghan nation consists of several distinct tribes, each subdivided into clans, or families, over which a rude form of patriarchal government is maintained. Their laws, religion, and usages are based upon the Mohammedan code—the Kuran. The former Kingdom of Caubool—erected, towards the middle of the last century, under Ahmed Shah—embraced the whole of Affghanistan, together with large portions of the neighbouring states; but within more recent times the country has become divided into several independent principalities. The ill-judged attempt, on the part of Britain, to reimpose upon the Affghan nation a ruler whom they despised led to the disasters which befell the Anglo-Indian army in 1841-2. The principal cities of Affghanistan are Caubool, Candahar, and Heraut, each of which is under a distinct chieftainship. In 1856 and the following year, an effort made by Persia to absorb Heraut within her own territory (to which, indeed, that city had at various former periods been attached) was frustrated by British intervention. Pop. about 5,000,000.

Afioom Kara-hissar, an interior city of Asia Minor, within the province of Anatolia, and containing upwards of 50,000 inhabitants. Lon. 30.83 E., lat. 38.45 N.

Africa, one of the three great divisions of the Old World, is united to Asia by the Isthmus of Sucz, which is 70 miles across. Elsewhere it is surrounded by the sea, and forms a vast peninsula, of not less than 12,000,000 sq. m. in superficial extent. Between the shores of the Mediterranean and the waters of the Southern Ocean Africa measures (in the direction of N. and S.) 5000 miles: from the Indian Ocean on the E. to the Atlantic on the W. it is upwards of 4600 miles across. The line of the equator passes through the middle of Africa, by far the larger portion of which falls within the torrid zone. Hence—coupled with its unbroken extent of mainland, and its vast expanse of desert—the superior heat, more generally arid character, and greater abundance of animal life, by which it is distinguished from any of the other divisions of the globe. The most characteristic natural feature of Africa is its vast Sahara, or desert, which stretches in almost unbroken continuity from the Atlantic Ocean on one side to the shores of the Red Sea on the other,—an arid belt of more than a thousand miles across. The Sahara forms a complete division between the portions of Africa on either side of it, to the northward or southward, which differ alike in external aspect, climate, natural produce, and population. Northern Africa, which extends along the Mediterranean coasts, includes the hills and intervening valleys of Mount Atlas, and is a watered region, of warm climate, and for the most part of great fertility. To the south of the Desert begins Central Africa, which includes vast plains, watered by the Niger and its tributary, the Chadda, with Lake Chad and other inland waters—possessing a climate that is strictly tropical, and abounding in new varieties of vegetable and animal life. The sugar-cane and the orange flourish in the valleys of the Atlas; and the date-palm upon its southern slopes, as well as in the oases of the wilderness. The yam, ground-nut, and papaw, with the butter-tree, monkey-bread, palm-oil tree, and forests of various dye-woods and gums, distinguish the plains of Central Africa and the coasts of Senegambia and Guinea. To the south of the equator, Africa exhibits other and distinct phases of scenery, climate, and produce. Large portions of this continent remain still unexplored; but the discoveries of Burton and Speke, and, more recently, of Baker, added to those of Livingstone, have made known to Europeans the existence of watered and fertile regions in the interior (between the equator and the southern tropic), peopled by industrious native races, and abundant in natural produce of the descriptions most useful to civilised man. Cotton and indigo are indigenous there, and the climate—moderated by elevation above the sea-level—is temperate and healthy, though within the torrid zone. Still further south, as the neighbourhood of the Orange River is approached, the unrivalled abundance of animal life—displayed, in the vast herds of buffaloes and antelopes, with the lion, elephant, hyena, rhinoceros, giraffe, quagga, ostrich, and numberless others, which roam over the immense interior karroos or plains—imparts its prominent feature to the scene. Within the Cape Colony—the southern extremity of the African mainland—the climate is again temperate (but with the altered seasons of the southern hemisphere), and the vegetation exhibits distinct forms of life, displaying in profuse abundance the various heaths, aloes, and plants of such a description. The two largest rivers of Africa are the Nile and the Niger. The former descends from the highlands of Abyssinia to the basin of the Mediterranean, passing in its course through Nubia and Egypt, along a valley which its waters alone rescue from the sterility of the adjoining deserts. The latter flows in an easterly course through the plains of Central Africa, and afterwards enters (in a southwardly direction) the upper extremity of the Gulf of Guinea. The Chadda (or Benue, as its upper portion, first visited by Dr. Barth, is called), which joins the Niger, is perhaps not inferior to the main stream in length and volume. On the western side of Africa, the rivers Senegal and the Gambia, to the north of the equator, with the Congo, Coanza, and Gariep, in the southern hemisphere, rank next in importance. On the eastern coast, the river Zambesi—recently traced by Dr. Livingstone through its prolonged course in the far-distant interior of the continent—is the principal stream. The climate of Africa is hotter than that of other parts of the globe, and its intra-tropical coasts are unhealthy to Europeans. The population of Africa includes a numerous variety of races and languages. In the north, the Arab stock—in Central Africa, the Negro family—and towards the southern extremity of the continent, the Caffre tribes—impart the prominent characteristics in this point of regard. The Negro, or black variety of the human family, is distributed over the larger extent of the African continent, and comprises the vastly greater number of its native population. Negro Africa—Belades-Soudan (i. e. the country of the Blacks, or Negro-land) of native geography—begins to the south of the desert, and extends over the central regions of the continent as far, perhaps, as the 16th parallel of S. lat., including the whole of the intervening coasts upon the western side of the continent. Throughout this wide-spread region, the population is divided into a vast number of petty native states or kingdoms, the rulers of which aim at extension of their power by means of predatory attacks on their neighbours, with the sole purpose of supplying the demands of the slave-market. The political divisions of Northern Africa comprise Morocco, Algeria, Tunis, and Tripoli, within the region of the Atlas; with Egypt and Nubia, belonging to the valley of the Nile. Algeria is now a French province. The English, French, and Dutch possess settlements upon the western coasts to the N. of the equator, as the Portuguese do upon either side of the continent to the southward of the line. In the extreme south of the continent are the British colonies of the Cape of Good Hope and Natal.

Afrique, St., a town of France, dep. Aveyron, on the Sargue. Pop. 6700.

Agably, a town and caravan-station of Northern Africa, in the oasis of Tuat (within the limits of the Sahara). Lon. 0.10 E., lat. 28.20 N.

Agades, a city of interior Africa, the capital of the kingdom of Air or Asben; situated on the line of caravan-route between Mourzook and Soccatoo, and 47 days' journey to the SW. of the former place. Dr. Barth, in 1850, was the first European to visit it.

Agadir, or Santa Cruz, a seaport of Morocco, prov. Suse, on the Atlantic coast, 18 m. S. of C. Ghir.

Alexandria, a maritime city of Egypt, situated about 30 miles west of the Rosetta branch of the Nile. The city was first built by Alexander the Great, and was several miles in extent. Part of the ancient walls are standing, with square towers, and the gates are of Thebaic and granite marble. It was formerly a place of great trade, all the treasures of the East Indies being deposited here before the discovery of the route by the Cape of Good Hope; and has regained some of its former commercial importance since the establishment of the "overland" route to India. It has communication with Cairo both by the line of railway which connects those cities, and by the Mahmudieh Canal, which joins the Nile. Alexandria was taken by the French invaders under Buonaparte, in 1798, and was retaken from them by the English in 1801; it surrendered to the latter in 1807, but was soon afterwards evacuated. Algeria, a province of Northern Africa, now a French colony. Algeria stretches along the coasts of the Mediterranean for a length of 600 miles, and extends in the direction of its breadth across the hills and valleys of the Atlas region, to the borders of the desert. It embraces upwards of 100,000 square miles of territory, with a native population of two millions, besides above 200,000 French and other European settlers. Algeria is a country rich in natural produce, both vegetable and mineral, and contains tracts well suited to the labours of the husbandman. The native inhabitants embrace Moors, Arabs, and Kabyles—the former dwelling in the cities, the two latter in the open plains and among the mountains—all of them Mohammedans in religion. Prior to 1830, Algeria constituted an independent state, under the nominal rule of a Dey, but in reality subject to the sway of a lawless soldiery. The French conquest, commenced in that year by the capture of the chief city of the territory, was not completed until 1847, when the famous Arab chieftain, Abd-el-Kader, surrendered to their arms.

Algesiras, a town of Andalusia, in Spain.

Algiers, the capital of the territory of Algeria, is a maritime city, built on the side of a hill, next the harbour; and the houses appearing one above another, of a resplendent whiteness, make a fine appearance from the Mediterranean. The country around is adorned with gardens and villas, orange and olive groves, and numerous vineyards. Algiers for ages braved the resentment of the most powerful states in Christendom for its piracies, and for sending into slavery the crews of all Christian vessels that were taken. The emperor Charles V. lost a fine fleet and army in an engagement against it in 1541; the English burned the vessels in the harbour in 1670 and 1685; it was bombarded by the French in 1688: in 1775, the Spaniards made a descent near the city with a formidable army; and, in 1784, a powerful fleet attacked the forts that defend the harbour, both of the two latter attempts against it being repulsed. In 1816, however, a formidable British fleet, under the command of Lord Exmouth, destroyed the vessels in the harbour, and compelled the city to surrender; but it was restored to the Dey on certain conditions. Algiers is now the residence of the governor-general of the French possessions in Africa; European manners, customs, and dresses are becoming common; and the streets, which were formerly narrow and filthy, have been improved, and all received French names. Pop. about 60,000.

Alps, a chain of mountains in Europe, which begins at the Gulf of Genoa, to the east of Nice, passes into Switzerland, crosses that country and Tyrol, separates Germany from Italy, and terminates at the north part of the Gulf of Venice. The declivities of the Alps are remarkably steep; hence avalanches of snow and ice are frequent; and the general scenery is magnificently bold. The Alps were but little known until the time of the emperor Augustus, who subdued the numerous barbarous tribes which inhabited the Alpine valleys, constructed roads, &c.; but the means of easy communication have been greatly facilitated by the roads made during the present century. All the higher summits of the Alps rise above the snow-line. Mont Blanc, their culminating point, is 15,730 feet in altitude.

Alps, Australian (or Warragong Mountains), a chain of mountains in the SE. part of the Australian continent, within the province of Victoria and the adjoining portion of New South Wales. Their higher summits, which are capped with America, one of the great divisions of the globe, comprehends the whole of the Western Continent, or New World—still so called, from the comparatively recent period at which it became known to the people of other parts of the earth. America was discovered by Christopher Columbus, towards the close of the 15th century (A. D. 1492). In point of size, America is superior to any of the other divisions of the globe, excepting Asia. From north to south, it stretches through more than 9000 miles, from the waters of the Arctic Sea to those of the Southern Ocean. Cape Horn, at its southward extremity, is in lat. 56.59 S. In the direction of E. and W., the proportions of the New World are much less considerable. Its widest dimensions exceed 3000 miles across, but between the parallels of 8° and 30° (N. lat.) it narrows into the contracted limits of the Mexican Isthmus. The narrowest portion of this tract forms the Isthmus of Panama, upon the opposite sides of which the waters of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans approach within less than thirty miles. North America embraces the whole of the vast territory to the northward, and South America that lying to the southward, of the Isthmus of Panama. The former is about one-fifth part superior to the latter, in point of magnitude. The natural features of the New World are modelled on a scale of large extent. Its mountains are, indeed, inferior in altitude to those of the Asiatic continent, but its inland waters surpass those of any other region of the globe. In North America, the Rocky Mountains form the great back-bone of the continent, and the Alleghany system stretches through the eastern and older-settled portions of the United States. In South America, the Andes extend along the coasts of the Pacific, through a continuous length of 4000 miles. The Mississippi, in North America, and the Amazon, in the southern division of the New World, surpass in length of channel any other rivers on the globe. The vast basin of the former includes upwards of a million—that of the latter, two and a half millions—of square miles. In North America, the river St Lawrence brings down to the sea the waters of five vast lakes, which together cover an area of larger extent than the whole of Great Britain. Stretching through more than 13 degrees of latitude, the climate of the New World necessarily exhibits every kind of variety, from the snows of the Frigid, to the intense heats of the Torrid Zone. But its intra-tropical regions are, upon the whole, less heated than the similar latitudes of the Old World, and the climate of the whole is generally moister. Hence the luxuriant development of vegetable life in its vast plains, and upon the banks of its magnificent rivers. Both the plants and the animals that are indigenous to the New World differ from those of other regions. Nearly all the larger quadrupeds are absent from its shores, and the common domestic animals, now spread in countless abundance over its plains, owe their introduction to the colonising tendencies of the European, whom they have uniformly accompanied in his wanderings over the globe. Some of the most common food-plants—rice, wheat, and other cereals—owe their introduction to the New World to a similar agency. On the other hand, the nations of older lands are indebted to America for the potato and the tobacco-plant, and both maize and cassava are native productions of the Western World. The native population of America belong to the Indian or copper-coloured variety of the human family, which (after a brief period of struggle) altogether succumbed beneath the superior attainments and energies of the white man. Over by far the larger portion of the American continent, the Indian is fast passing away from his native plains and forests, and his race seems doomed to extinction. In the present day the Indian population of America is not equal to more than a sixth part of its total number of inhabitants. About an eighth part of the whole consists of the Negro race, carried thither from Africa, and an equal proportion is made up by the various mixed races. But the descendants of European nations form nearly two-thirds of the whole; and among these, the Anglo-Saxon population take the first rank, both numerically and in order of political importance, holding sway over the vastly larger portion of North America. The empire of Great Britain, and the republic of the United States, divide between them more than five-sixths of the northern half of the New World, including all its finer and more productive territories. The countries of the Mexican Isthmus, as well as those into which South America is divided, are all (with the exception of Brazil) under the rule of the Spanish portion of the population—descendants of the early conquerors of the Western World. In Brazil, the dominant portion of the population is of Portuguese blood. It is only within the last half century that these countries have attained the rank of independent nations, throwing off the prior allegiance which they held to the crowns of Spain and Portugal. In North America, the United States—formerly possessions of the English—had attained their independence at an earlier date (1776). A portion of territory on the mainland of South America, with some of the smaller islands of the West Indies, is held respectively by the French and the Dutch.

Arabia, a country of Asia, extending 1430 miles in length, and 1200 in breadth. It is divided popularly into three parts—Petræa, Deserta, and Felix. Arabia Petræa lies to the south of Syria, along the north-east coast of the Red Sea: the north part is mountainous and, in general, stony, sandy, and barren; but some places yield sufficient nourishment for cattle, whose milk, and the flesh of camels, are the chief food of its inhabitants. Arabia Felix occupies the SW. corner of the peninsula, and embraces many rich tracts which produce a variety of fruit, honey, wax, cinnamon, cassia, manna, spikenard, frankincense, myrrh, and coffee, of which latter prodigious quantities are exported. Arabia Deserta includes nearly all the remainder of the country. But these divisions, introduced into geography by the Greek and Roman writers, are unknown to the Arabs themselves. The Arabs are of a middle stature and brown complexion, and have always a grave and melancholy air, which, aided by the imposing aspect of their beards, gives a dignity to their manner that is very striking. They are abstemious, consider hospitality as a religious duty, and derive their subsistence from their flocks, from hunting, and from what they acquire by plunder; they acknowledge no sovereign but the emir, or leading sheikh of their tribe, who is their natural prince, and to whom they pay implicit obedience. The dress of the Arabs consists of a white robe, bound with a leather girdle, and drawers made of linen; they wear a kind of red cap, and sometimes slippers, but generally half-boots, in order to be ready to get on horseback. Mohammed was a native of this country, and, under the impulse of religious zeal, his followers conquered a great part of Asia, Africa, and Europe, establishing their religion wherever they went.

Asia, one of the three great portions of the eastern continent, and the largest among the divisions of the globe, embraces upwards of 17,000,000 of square miles. Asia is united to Africa by the isthmus of Suez. On the west, its frontier-line is coincident with the eastern border of Europe, along the mountain-chains of the Caucasus and the Ural. The Arctic, Pacific, and Indian Oceans form respectively the northern, eastern, and southern limits of the Asiatic continent. In the height of its mountain-chains, and the vast breadth, continuity, and altitude of its tablelands, Asia is superior to any other region. The Himalaya Mountains reach in their culminating point—Mount Everest (or Devadhunga)—28,002 feet, or upwards of five miles, above the sea. The Altai Mountains, though much less elevated, form part of a widely-extended system of elevation. The chains of Taurus and Lebanon, the Ghauts, and many others, belong to Asiatic geography. The deserts of Mongolia and Arabia—the former in the central, the latter in the SW. portion, of this continent—are of vast extent. But Asia comprises some of the most fertile and productive regions of the globe; amongst them the rich peninsulas of India within and beyond the Ganges, with the provinces of Asiatic Turkey, and the watered plains of China. The rivers of Asia are inferior in length to those of the New World, but are still magnificent streams. The two great rivers of China—Yang-tsze-kiang and Hwang-ho—are among the principal, and the former is probably the longest river in the eastern half of the globe. In Southern Asia, the Ganges and Indus, with the Brahmapootra, Irawady, and other streams, are of first-rate importance. The Euphrates and Tigris belong to a more westerly region of the Asiatic continent. Three great streams—the Obi, Yenesei, and Lena—flow through the cold and barren wastes of the Siberian plain, towards the Arctic Sea. Asia comprehends within its limits all the varieties of climate that belong to a latitudinal range of 80 degrees, from the equator far into the frozen zone. Northern Asia is cold, Middle Asia dry and temperate, Southern Asia generally warm and moist. The shores of the Persian Gulf, with parts of the neighbouring countries, constitute one of the hottest regions on the globe; while the coasts of the Arctic Ocean, to the eastward of the Lena, exhibit an intensity of cold that has no parallel elsewhere. The productions of the natural world are not less varied. Asia is rich in minerals. The gold-mines of the Ural and Altai, though surpassed in importance by the Australian and Californian gold-fields, are of high value. Silver is also abundant in the Altai region. Iron and other useful metals are extensively distributed. Southern Asia (especially its south-eastern shores and the islands of the adjoining archipelago) displays a varied and luxuriant vegetation, which includes nearly all the productions that are of most utility to man; amongst them rice, cotton, indigo, and a vast number of valuable fruits, spices, and forest-trees. The tea-plant belongs exclusively to South-eastern Asia and the Japanese islands. Animal life, especially in its larger forms, is nowhere else so abundant. The lion, tiger, elephant, camel, horse, and various members of the ox tribe, are all native to this continent. The population of Asia embraces members of four out of the five great divisions of the human race, and probably numbers not less than 500 millions—or more than half the entire population of the globe. The most numerous tribes are those that belong to the Mongolian stock, who occupy China and the neighbouring countries. Western Asia (with, according to ethnologists, a large portion of Southern Asia, including the whole of the Hindoo peninsula) is peopled by the Caucasian stock. The Malay family of mankind is found in the islands of the East Indian archipelago, together with various tribes whose darker skin and lower social grade indicate them as belonging to the Negro race. Asia was the first-peopled region of the globe, and its migratory hordes have in all ages constituted the source whence other lands have derived their inhabitants, whether as peaceful colonists or as conquerors. The political divisions of Asia are numerous; but the empires of China, Russia, and Britain, comprehend between them not less than three-fourths of its entire area. The dominion of Russia is exercised over the plains of Northern Asia, that of China over the centre and east of the continent, and the sway of Britain over large portions of the south. The empires of Turkey and Persia divided between them, until within a recent period, the finest regions of Western Asia; but Russia has now acquired a sure footing to the southward of the Caucasus. Australia, one of the great divisions of the globe, and the one among them that is entirely within the southern hemisphere. Australia is surrounded by the waters of the Indian, Pacific, and Southern Oceans, but is continental in point of extent, being only one-fourth less than Europe in magnitude. Large portions of the interior of the Australian continent are still unknown. It is only, indeed, within a period comparatively recent that its existence has become known to Europeans, and settlements established on its shores. The Dutch visited many portions of the Australian coast during the earlier half of the 17th century, and Tasman entirely circumnavigated the "Great South Land" (as it was called) in 1642. The name of New Holland, by which its western half long continued to be known, commemorates the Dutch discoveries. During more than a century after Tasman's time, the shores of Australia were seldom visited. In 1768, Captain Cook surveyed its whole eastern coast-line, to which he gave the name of New South Wales, and took possession of it on the part of the British Crown. Twenty years later, the first European settlement was established on its shores, the foundations of the town of Sydney being laid by the English in 1788. Three-fourths of the persons composing the colonising party were convicts, and New South Wales continued to be used as a convict settlement during more than the first half-century of its existence. Other portions of the Australian coasts have subsequently been explored by the English nation, and settlements made upon some of them. The colony of South Australia was established in 1836; that of Western Australia (or Swan River), in 1829. The thriving and now populous province of Victoria—previously constituting the "Port Phillip district" of New South Wales—was made a distinct colony in 1850. Australia differs in nearly all respects—aspect, climate, and productions, alike—from other portions of the globe. The interior, in so far as it has been explored, appears to consist of wide-spreading plains, for the most part arid and desert. The coast districts are hilly, especially towards the SE., where the ranges of the Australian Alps and the Blue Mountains occur. But its general scarcity of running water, and the paucity of large rivers, with the absence of the larger forms of animal life, are among the prime characteristics of Australian geography. The Murray, its most important river, has a course of 1200 miles, but its volume of water is for the most part inconsiderable. The Australian climate is warm (even in its more temperate regions), but liable to frequent and sudden variations. The seasons of course reverse those of the northern hemisphere; July being the coldest, and January the hottest, period of the year. Very few of the native plants are of any use to man, though all the food-plants of Europe (besides many that belong to other lands) flourish in its cultivated plains. Australian zoology includes scarcely any of the mammalia, excepting the kangaroos and opossums, which are now rapidly disappearing from the settled districts. But the domestic quadrupeds of Europe have thriven amidst the boundless expanse of the Australian "bush," and the wool furnished by its sheep now supplies more than half of the large demand for that article in the English market. The mineral wealth of Australia is very great. The gold-fields of Victoria and New South Wales (first discovered in 1851) are only rivalled in richness by those of California, and the copper-ore of South Australia is the finest in the world. Within recent years, Australia has contributed £12,000,000 sterling to the annual gold-produce of the world. The native population of Australia are perhaps the most degraded members of the human family, and the settlement of Europeans upon their shores has done nothing to elevate their social or moral condition. They are few in number, and are fast becoming still further diminished. The colonial population (composed chiefly of British settlers and their descendants) already numbers upwards of a million, and is rapidly increasing. Great Britain is the only nation that has formed any permanent settlement upon the Australian coasts, and her claim to sovereignty over the whole of this vast region of the south is undisputed.

Australia, South, a British colony, forming one of the provinces into which the settled portions of the Australian continent are divided. South Australia extends from the waters of the Southern Ocean as far into the interior as the parallel of 26°, and comprehends in breadth the space lying between the meridians of 129° and 141° E. long. To this large area of 370,000 sq. miles has been provisionally added, since 1863, the whole adjacent country to the northward, as far as the shores of the Indian Ocean. The lower portion of the river Murray, and the basin of Lake Torrens, are within this province. The population of S. Australia exceeds 189,000. Its industry is chiefly agricultural, and the wheat grown within the province is largely supplied to the neighbouring colonies. The valuable copper-ore is also a great source of wealth. The capital of the colony is Adelaide.

Australia, Western, a British colony, situated on the W. side of the Australian continent. Its nominal limits are of immense extent, including the entire tract of country lying to the W. of the meridian of 129°. But the territory actually settled is confined to the SW. corner of the continent, embracing the country in the immediate neighbourhood of the Swan River and King George's Sound. It was on the banks of the Swan River that the colonists of Western Australia first settled in 1829. The natural capabilities of Western Australia are, perhaps, hardly inferior to those of the other Australian colonies, but its progress has notwithstanding been slow, and its population does not at present exceed 25,000. The town of Perth, on the Swan River, is the capital of the colony, and Freemantle, at the mouth of the same stream, its chief port.

THE WAY TO BABYLON WILL NEVER BRING YOU TO JERUSALEM.

HE THAT STAYS IN THE VALLEY WILL NEVER GET OVER THE HILL.

Austria (Lower and Upper), two provinces of the Austro-Hungarian Empire, lying along the course of the Danube, and together formed the former arch-duchy of Austria. Total area, 12,280 sq. m.; pop. 2,728,000. Vienna, the cap. of the Empire, is within Lower Austria.

Austro-Hungarian Empire, an important dominion of central Europe, known prior to 1868 as the Austrian Empire. The change in title was due to the Austro-Prussian war of 1866, which deprived the house of Austria of its former place in the affairs of the German nation. The Austro-Hungarian Emp. includes, besides Austria proper, the prov. of Salzburg, Styria, Carinthia, Carniola, the Littoral, Tyrol, Bohemia, Moravia, Silesia, Galicia, the Bukowine, and Dalmatia, which are together called the Cis-Leithan countries, and are under the administration of the 'reich'; also the Trans-Leithan countries, under the Hungarian crown, viz., Hungary, Transylvania, Croatia, Slavonia, and the Military Frontier. The principal rivers are the Danube, Rhine, Elbe, Oder, Vistula, Dniester, Drave, and Po. The Empire comprises an area of 250,000 sq. miles, with a population exceeding 35,000,000.

Brazil, a country of South America, and the most extensive of its political divisions. Brazil embraces a large portion of the eastern coast-line of South America, and includes a surface of 3,000,000 sq. m. —an extent more than three-fourths that of the whole area of Europe. The central and eastern portions of Brazil form a plateau of moderate elevation, in some places crossed by mountain-chains that rise to 5000 feet and upwards above the sea-level; but the larger portion of the empire is an immense river-plain, watered by the Amazon and its numerous tributaries. The line of the equator crosses the northern part of Brazil, and only a very small portion of the country is beyond the tropical limits: hence the climate is for the most part warm. Its natural resources include gold, silver, and iron, together with the diamond and other precious stones; besides an abundant variety of the richest vegetable produce, amongst which are rose-wood, mahogany, and numerous dye-woods, as well as numerous palms. Sugar, coffee, and cotton, are the great staples of Brazilian commerce. The population was estimated in 1868 at 8,184,000, above half the number consisting of negroes. The whites constitute less than a sixth part of the entire number. There are some tribes of native Indians, together with mixed races. In its political condition, Brazil forms a kind of federal empire, each of its provinces having a distinct local legislature. An imperial legislature presides over the whole. Prior to 1822, Brazil was attached to the crown of Portugal, but has since formed an independent nation.

Caermarthenshire, a county of S. Wales, 35 miles in length and 20 in breadth; containing 592,640 acres, divided into 8 hundreds and 39 parishes, and having six market-towns. It is fruitful in corn and grass, has plenty of wood, coal, lead, and lime, and is not so mountainous as the other counties of Wales. The principal rivers are the Towy and the Teify. Pop. 115,710.

Caermarthen, the cap. of the above co., and a town of considerable trade, seated on the river Towy. Pop. 10,488.

Caernarvonshire, a county of N. Wales, 50 miles long and 13 broad; it contains 496,000 acres, is divided into 10 hundreds and 72 parishes, and has a city and five market-towns. The principal rivers are the Conway and Seiont. This county is the most rugged district of North Wales. Its central part is occupied by the famed Snowdon; and the prospects around are rude and wild in the highest degree. Cattle, sheep, and goats are almost its chief riches. Copper and lead mines are worked in various parts of the mountains; blue slates, of a superior quality, are got in abundance; and quantities of stone, excellent for hones, are dug near Snowdon; to the dreary region of which the rich vale of Conway below forms a pleasing contrast. Pop. 106,121.

Caernarvon, a sea-port of N. Wales, and cap. of the above co. Edward II. was born in Caernarvon Castle. Pop. 9449.

Caerphilly, a small town of S. Wales co. Glamorgan.

Caffraria, a country of south-eastern Africa, inclusive, in a general sense, of the entire tract over which the Caffre race extends; that is, from the frontier of the Cape Colony as far northward as Delagoa Bay (S. lat. 26.0). But a large portion of this extensive region is now included within the British Colony of Natal, and it is only the tract of country situated between Natal and the eastern frontier of the Cape Colony that is properly designated as Caffraria. The Caffres are a race superior in all respects to the other native populations of South Africa. They are of deep brown colour, their frame athletic, with well-formed limbs; the hair short, black, curly, and less woolly than that of the negro. Their exercises are hunting, wrestling, or dancing; they are expert in throwing lances; their other arms are spears, bludgeons, and very large oval shields, made of the hides of oxen. The women are handsome, and modest in their behaviour; and are employed in cultivating their gardens, and other domestic affairs. The Caffres believe in a Supreme Being, who created the world; but they are addicted to the grossest superstition. The internal wars between the tribes continually disturb their quiet, and their predatory habits have within recent years brought them on numerous occasions into hostile encounter with the settlers in the adjacent British provinces.

Caffraria, British, a province forming the eastern frontier of the Cape Colony. It was first formed into a province under British protection, at the close of the Caffre war of 1847, and has been subsequently incorporated within the colony. King William's Town is the capital.

the capital and emporium of Bengal, and the seat of the supreme government of British India; with a large and strong citadel, called Fort William. The southern or European portion of Calcutta consists of spacious streets, with extensive mansions, and contrasts strikingly with the native division of the town. The mixture of European and Asiatic manners that may be observed here is curious; coaches, phaetons, chaises, with the palankeens and hackeries of the natives, the passing ceremonies of the Hindoos, and the different appearances of the fakirs, form a sight more extraordinary than, perhaps, any other city can present. The Hooghly (as the branch of the Ganges on which Calcutta stands is called) is navigable up to the town for ships of 500 tons; but larger vessels stop at Diamond Harbour, 50 miles below. The vicinity of Calcutta is very pleasing; as soon as its boundary is passed, the roads wind through beautiful villages, overhung with the finest and most picturesque foliage. Lat. 22.23 N., lon. 88.28 E. Pop. above 616,000.

Calder, a river of Yorkshire, which rises on the Lancashire border, and, flowing past the towns of Wakefield and Dewsbury, joins the Aire near Castleford.—A river of Lancashire, which has its origin near the above, and joins the Ribble.

Caledonia, New, a considerable island in the Pacific Ocean, between the parallels of 20° and 23° S., and the meridians of 164° and 167° E. It was discovered by Cook, in 1774. The natives (estimated at 25,000 in number) are active and well-made, of deep black colour, with curly hair. They practise cannibalism. The island has within recent years been made the seat of a French settlement.

Caledonia, New, a name formerly given to the extensive tract of country lying between the Rocky Mountains and the Pacific, within the limits of British North America. Prior to 1858, this region was thinly inhabited only by a native Indian population, among whom a few trading posts were maintained by the Hudson Bay Company. But the discovery of valuable gold-fields on the banks of Fraser river attracted large numbers of adventurers thither, and led to its formation into a distinct colony, under the title of British Columbia.

Cali, a town of New Granada, S. America, on the western declivity of the Andes. Pop. 4000.

Calicut, a commercial city of British India, on the coast of Malabar. It was the first Indian port reached by Europeans, after the discovery of the passage round the Cape, a Portuguese fleet having been conducted thither by Vasco di Gama, in 1498. Its importance has greatly declined since that period. Pop. 30,000.

California, one of the United States of N. America, embracing a tract of nearly 200,000 sq. m., situated upon the western side of the continent, and extending from the shores of the Pacific inland to the range of the Sierra Nevada. The valley of the rivers Sacramento and San Joaquin (which unite a short distance above their entrance into the Bay of San Francisco) stretches through the province from N. to S., for a length of 500 miles. Prior to 1848, California (which designation then embraced a much more extensive region—now partly included within the Utah and New Mexico Territories) belonged to Mexico. At that time, its population did not number 25,000. Immediately on its cession by Mexico followed the discovery of its rich gold-fields, which at once rendered California a centre of attraction to adventurers from every region, and caused a rapid accession to its population. It was admitted a member of the Union in 1850, and in 1860 had a population numbering upwards of 550,000. The gold-fields of California lie within the valley of the Sacramento river; but, besides its mineral wealth, this fine territory possesses numerous other commercial resources, derived from its fertile soil and extensive pasture-grounds. The value of gold annually exported from California has hitherto exceeded £12,000,000 sterling. The nominal capital of the State is Benicia, on the Sacramento, but San Francisco is the chief trading-port and the most populous of its cities. Numerous thriving townships have sprung into existence throughout the province, especially within the vicinity of the gold-diggings.

California, Lower (or Old—so called in distinction from the country above described), a peninsula of long and narrow shape, lying on the western side of N. America, and forming one of the territories of the Mexican Confederation. It is thinly populated—chiefly by the native Indian race—and appears to have for the most part a rocky and unproductive surface. Cattle and numerous wild animals are abundant. Loreto and La Paz are its chief towns. Between the peninsula and the mainland is the Gulf of California, the seat of a pearl-fishery, now greatly diminished in value.

Cambray, a fortified city of France, dep. Nord. This town has been long famous for its manufacture of fine linens and lawns; and hence the term cambrics. Lat. 50.11 N., lon. 3.14 E. Pop. 22,000.

Cambridge, the capital of Cambridge-shire, and the seat of a celebrated university, supposed to have been founded during the heptarchy; it contains 13 colleges and four halls, which have equal privileges with the colleges. The river Cam, or Granta, flows past the town. Pop. 30,078.—A town of Massachusetts.—A fortified town of South Carolina.—Another in Maryland, U. S.

Cambridgeshire, a county of England; 50 miles long and 25 broad, containing 549,120 acres, divided into 15 hundreds and 161 parishes, and having 8 market-towns. The principal rivers are the Ouse, Nen, and Cam. The southern and eastern parts are pleasant and healthy, but the northern part, called the isle of Ely, is low and fenny, from the confluence of many rivers. All the waters of the middle part of England, which do not flow into the Thames or the Trent, run into these fens, which at some seasons are partially overflowed, or appear covered with fogs. Total pop. 186,906.

Camden, a town of South Carolina.—Another in Maine, U. S.

Campo Mayor, a fortified town of Portugal.

Camtoos, a river in the Cape Colony, S. Africa.

Canada, a British colony, the most extensive and important of the British dependencies in the New World. Canada includes the greater part of the valley of the St Lawrence, extending from the mouth of the river upwards to the great lakes, the northern shores of which are within its limits. For a distance of 120 miles below Lake Ontario, the St Lawrence forms the boundary between the British territory and that of the United States; thence to the sea, either side of the great river is British. The river Ottawa, an impetuous stream which joins the St Lawrence from the north westward, marks the division between Upper and Lower Canada (or Ontario and Quebec, the names now officially given to the respective divisions of Canada proper). There is considerable difference of climate and produce, as well as of population, between the two. The winter climate of Lower Canada is severe, and the cold of prolonged duration; the bulk of its population (habitans, as they are termed) of French descent. Upper Canada—especially the peninsular tract which is enclosed between the lakes of Ontario, Erie, and Huron—has a much more temperate and equable climate, with a rich and productive soil. The mineral wealth of the province is considerable; it comprises iron and copper, with lead, tin, and other ores, besides abundance of gypsum and various marbles and building-stones. But the vast forests of pines and firs supply the most characteristic article of Canadian produce, and the material upon which the industry of the colonists is most extensively employed. Sugar is made from the maple on a scale of considerable extent. Aided by the extensive immigration from Britain, the population of Canada has increased with wonderful rapidity within recent years, and at present exceeds 3,600,000. The native Indian population has diminished to fewer than 40,000. Canada, colonised by France at the beginning of the 17th century, remained a French province for upwards of a hundred and fifty years. The genius of Wolfe, displayed upon the plains of Abraham, decided its transference to British rule. Quebec fell in 1759, and Canada was finally ceded to Britain four years later. The 'Dominion of Canada' includes, together with Canada Proper, the adjacent provinces of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia, with Prince Edward Island, on the side of the Atlantic; and also British Columbia (inclusive of Vancouver Island), on the Pacific coast of America, with the more recently-formed province of Manitoba (the former Red River territory) in its central regions.

Cape of Good Hope (or Cape Colony), a territory in the southern part of Africa, colonised by the Dutch, and now belonging to the British. It derives its name from a celebrated promontory near the S. extremity of the African continent. Lat. 34.23 S., lon. 18.32 E. The country consists of three successive plateaus, increasing in elevation according to their distance from the sea, and separated from each other by as many chains of mountains. The most magnificent plants that adorn our greenhouses and gardens are brought from this part of the world, and among the animals are prodigious numbers of Cape buffaloes, antelopes, and sheep, with vultures, eagles, ostriches, &c. Sheep and cattle farming, with the culture of the soil, are the chief industrial pursuits of the Cape colonists. The population amounts to 682,000, fewer than half of whom are whites—many of them the descendants of the earlier Dutch settlers. The coloured population embraces Hottentots and Caffres, with various mixed races.

Cape Town, the capital of the Cape Colony, stands on the west side of Table Bay, and is enclosed on the land side by rugged mountains, the most conspicuous among which is the Table Mountain, 3582 ft. in height. Cape Town, originally founded by the Dutch, surrendered to a British fleet in 1795, and was restored in 1802 by the treaty of Amiens; it again surrendered to the British in 1806, and was finally ceded to them in 1814. Pop. 22,000.

Chili, or Chile, a country of South America, extending, on the coast of the Pacific Ocean, from the Desert of Atacama to the parallel of 44° S. It is divided into thirteen provinces, the most southerly of which consists of the island of Chiloe. Chili, though bordering on the torrid zone, never feels the extremity of heat, being screened on the east by the Andes, and refreshed from the west by cooling sea-breezes. The fertility of the soil corresponds with the benignity of the climate, and is wonderfully accommodated to European productions. Nature, too, has enriched the country with valuable mines of gold, silver, copper, iron, tin, and lead; also, with salt springs and mineral waters; and coal is found near Concepcion. The chief rivers are the Maule, Biobio, Maypu, and Chuapa, all of which rise in the Andes, and flow west into the Pacific Ocean. Chili formed a portion of Spanish S. America prior to 1818, when its independency was proclaimed, and a republican constitution adopted. Pop. 1,558,000.

Chillan, a city of Chili, capital of an inland province. Lat. 35.36 S., lon. 71.5 W.

This district belongs to the crown, and, for time immemorial, has had the nominal office of Steward of the Chiltern Hundreds, by the acceptance of which, a commoner vacates his seat in Parliament.

Chimborazo, a celebrated mountain of S. America, formerly regarded as the highest peak of the Andes system, to which it belongs. Its altitude, 21,415 ft, is, however, surpassed by several other summits. Chimborazo is in 1° 22' S. lat.

China, an extensive country of eastern Asia, lying between the parallels of 20° and 41°, and extending from the merid. of 97° eastward to the Pacific. Its area is 1,300,000 sq. m., or more than a third of the size of Europe. All the natural features of China are on an extensive scale. Chains of mountains (which in the SW. provinces rise into snow-covered peaks) diversify its surface, and its rivers are superior in length of course to any others in the eastern hemisphere. Nor are the works of human industry by which it is distinguished less imposing, as the remains of its Great Wall (built long prior to the Christian era, and extending across hill and valley for 1250 miles), and its Grand Canal, testify. China is divided into 18 provinces, which exhibit considerable differences of soil and climate. Its manufactures embrace almost every article of industry; but the most noted are porcelain, silk, cotton, and paper; and the chief export is tea. The numerous mountains contain mines of iron, lead, tin, zinc, copper, quicksilver, gold, and silver; quarries of marble, coal, lapis lazuli, jasper, rock crystals, granite, and a kind of sonorous stones, of which musical instruments are composed, are abundant; and here is potter's earth of such various and superior kinds, that the fine porcelain of China is unrivalled. Besides the fruits peculiar to the country, it produces the greater part of those of Europe. The Chinese cultivate even the bottom of their waters; the beds of their lakes, ponds, and rivulets, producing crops unknown to us. In the mountains and forests are wild animals of every species; and there is a great variety of most beautiful birds. The Chinese belong to the Mongol, or olive-coloured, variety of mankind. Corpulency is deemed a beauty in men, but a blemish in women, who affect a deal of modesty, and are remarkable for their little feet. Learning is much cultivated in this country: their writing is very peculiar; for every letter is a word, and, consequently, they have as many symbols or characters as words in their language. Their religion is paganism; they have no sabbath, nor even such a division of time as a week. The principal pagodas are dedicated to Fo, but they are not much frequented, for the generality are engaged with their household gods, every house having its altar and its deities. The population of China is estimated, on good grounds, at the enormous number of 362 millions, equal to a third of the entire human race! Many of the provinces are extraordinarily populous, containing upwards of six (and even seven) hundred inhabitants to a sq. m. It has been justly said of the Chinese, that their great characteristic is "to adhere to all that is established, and to reject all that is new. They are the very transcript of the ancient world, living in the present day; they wear the same costume, are subject to the same laws, which are administered precisely in the same way, and they exist to all intents and purposes in the same social and intellectual condition as their forefathers did 2000 years ago." Since the early part of the seventeenth century, the throne of China has been occupied by a dynasty of Manchoo Tartars. Within recent years, the internal condition of this empire has been disturbed by a widely-spread rebellion, aiming at the overthrow of the existing sovereign power, and the issue of which it is impossible to foresee. Most of the southern provinces, and many of the principal cities, are in possession of the rebel army.—The Chinese Empire embraces, besides China Proper, the widely-extended region known as Chinese Tartary (or Manchooria and Mongolia), with Tibet and Corea. The total area of the vast regions thus brought together under the sway of China is not less than four and a half millions of sq. m.—more than a twelfth part of the entire known land upon the earth's surface. The empires of Britain and Russia alone surpass that of China in point of superficial extent: either of them is greatly inferior in respect of population.

Chincha Islands, a group of islets in the Pacific Ocean, lying off the coast of Peru, to the S. of Lima, and much resorted to within recent years for their rich deposits of guano.

Circassia, a border-country of Europe and Asia, occupying the rugged heights and intervening valleys of Mount Caucasus, between the Black and Caspian Seas. Under the general name of Circassians are comprised a great number of distinct tribes, speaking various dialects, and whose habits are those of a rude and warlike population of mountaineers. The Circassians proper (Tcherkasses) dwell in the more western portion of the mountain-region. Its more eastwardly division embraces the Tschetschenzes and other independent tribes, against whom the efforts of Russian warfare were during upwards of a quarter of a century directed in vain. This resistance, however, terminated with the surrender of the heroic Schamyl in 1859, and the subjugation of the mountain-region is now complete. The only road by which the mountain-region is traversed passes through the defile of Dariel, at an elevation of 8000 feet above the sea. The Circassians are a fine and well-proportioned race, and the beauty of their women has been celebrated through all ages. They dwell in villages among the high mountain-valleys, and pay more regard to the rearing of cattle than to any Combaconum, an ancient city of Southern India, prov. Tanjore. Pop. 40,000.

Como, a city of Northern Italy, at the SW. extremity of the Lake of Como. The town is encircled by an amphitheatre of hills, and is defended by double walls, flanked with massive towers; but the streets are narrow, dark, and crowded. Pliny the Younger was born here, and in his letters justly extols the delightful scenery of its neighbourhood. Pop. 18,000.

Como, Lake of, a famous lake of N. Italy, which takes its name from the city above described. Its length, following the windings, is about 45 miles, but it is nowhere more than 4 miles broad. The lower regions of the mountains in which it is embosomed are covered with olives, vines, orchards, and well-cultivated plains; and above are beautiful groves of chestnut, pine, and fir. This body of water was the Larius Lacus of antiquity.

Comorin, Cape, a promontory forming the S. extremity of Hindoostan. Lat. 8.2 N., lon. 77.33 E.

Comoro Islands, four, in the Indian Ocean. Lat. 12.10 S., lon. 44.41 E.

Compeigne, a town of France, dep. Oise; famous for its magnificent royal palace, and memorable also as being the place where Joan of Arc, in 1430, fell into the power of the English.

Compostella, or St Jago de Compostella, a city of Spain, capital of Galicia, with an university. Lat. 42.52 N., lon. 8.27 W. —An inland town of Mexico.

Comrie, a town in Perthshire, Scotland.

Concan, a maritime subdivision of Hindoostan, belonging to the Bombay Presidency. A large proportion of the inhabitants are Hindoos; but many Bheels, Coolies, &c., inhabit the Ghauts and N. Concan. There are some fertile tracts producing rice, &c., but the general aspect is that of a congeries of steep and rocky mountains.

Concentayna, a town of Spain, prov. Valencia. It has manufactures of cloths and taffeties. Pop. 6000.

Conception, a city of Chili, S. America, cap. prov. of same name. Lat. 36.43 S., lon. 73.5 W. It was formerly a flourishing town, and previously to 1835 contained 20,000 inhabitants; but in that year it was visited by a dreadful earthquake, and the pop. is now estimated at 10,000. The bay of Conception has excellent anchorage.

tium. After being the capital of the Eastern (or Byzantine) Empire for upwards of a thousand years, Constantinople fell in 1453 before the arms of a Mohammedan conqueror, and has since remained the sovereign seat of the Ottoman power. The number of houses in this city is prodigious; but, in general, they are mean, and all of them constructed of wood, and the roofs coloured with hollow tiles. The public edifices alone are built of masonry, in a very solid manner. The inhabitants are half Turks, two-thirds of the other half Greeks and Armenians, and the rest Jews and Franks. There are a great number of ancient monuments still remaining, particularly the superb mosque of Saint Sophia, originally built by the emperor Justinian in the 6th century. The Gulf on the NE. of the city, called the Golden Horn, forms the harbour, and is one of the finest and most secure in the world. On its NE. side are the suburbs of Galata, Tophanah, Pera, and Cassim Pacha. There is a market for slaves of both sexes, and the Jews are the principal merchants, who bring them for sale. Constantinople is surrounded by walls of freestone, and flanked by 473 towers; it has also 20 gates, six on the land side, and seven each toward the harbour and the sea. Pop. variously estimated at from 400,000 to 700,000.

Conway, a river of Wales, which issues from a lake in Merionethshire, flows through a fertile vale of the same name, and enters the Irish Sea at Aberconway.

Cook's Inlet, an extensive arm of the sea on the north-west coast of America. Lat. 61.29 N., lon. 148.43 W.

Cook's Strait, dividing the North and Middle Islands of New Zealand.

Consuegra, a town of Spain, prov. La Mancha. In its vicinity are quarries of marble, jasper, &c. Pop. 8000.

Cooch-Bahar, or Vihar, a rajahship of Hindoostan, prov. Bengal. It is a dependency of the British.

Cookstown, a town in Tyrone, Ireland.

Coomassie, the capital of the kingdom of Ashantee. The inhabitants manufacture cotton cloths, fine pottery, and ornaments of gold; and they have a great trade in gold-dust and ivory with the merchants on the coast. Lat. 6.55 N., lon. 2.15 W.

Coorg, a principality of Hindoostan, lying among the Western Ghauts. It is under the control of a British resident. The climate is in general suitable to European constitutions, although the country abounds with forests. Pop. 60,000.

Cootehill, a town in Cavan county, Ireland. Pop. 1992.

Copenhagen, the capital of Denmark, with a university. It is situated on the island of Zealand, and is the best-built city in the north; the palaces of the nobility are, in general, splendid, and ornamented in the Italian style of architecture. There are manufactures of beautiful porcelain, sugar, silk, cotton, woollen cloths, canvas, and leather. The harbour, which is always crowded with shipping, is formed by an arm of the sea running between Zealand and the neighbouring island of Amak. Copenhagen suffered severely from the bombardment by the English in 1807. Lat. 55.41 N., lon. 12.34 E. Pop. 181,000.

Copiapo, a town in the N. of Chili, South America. In its neighbourhood are mines of gold, copper, sulphur, and salt. Lat. 27.10 S., lon. 71.5 W.

Corbie, a town in Somme, France.

Cordova, a city of Andalusia, Spain; famous for its horses. In the time of the Moors this city contained many splendid buildings, the remains of some of which still exist: it is said to have contained in the 10th century nearly a million of inhabitants. Cordova stands on the right bank of the Guadalquivir. Pop. 40,000.

—A city of Mexico, in the state of Vera Cruz, which produces abundance of tobacco.—A city and territory of the La Plata confederacy, which has a great trade in mules, and cotton and woollen cloths. Pop. of territory, 150,000.

Corea, a peninsula of Asia, extending between China and Japan. The principal products are wheat, rice, millet, ginseng, tobacco, iron, salt, castor and sable skins, a yellow varnish almost equal to gilding, and a peculiar kind of paper made of cotton. The Coreans are well-made, ingenious, brave, and tractable, but suspicious and unsociable towards strangers. They have borrowed the greater part of their customs, &c. from the Chinese; but their language is different. The south-west coast of this kingdom, for nearly 200 miles, is studded with an infinite number of small islands, to the distance of 50 miles from the shore, which are named the Corean Archipelago.

Corella, a city of Spain, prov. Navarre. Pop. 5850.

Corfe Castle, an ancient borough in Dorsetshire, seated on a peninsula called Purbeck Island. Pop. 1966.

Corfu, an island in the Mediterranean, near the coast of Albania; the most important of the Ionian Islands, and the seat of their government. The town of Corfu, its capital, has a strong castle and fort, and a good harbour. The chief products are wine, oil, honey, and salt. Pop. of town, 17,000.

Coria, a city in Estremadura, Spain.—A town in Andalusia, on the Guadalquivir. Pop. 3200.

Corinth, a famous city of Greece, within the Morea. It is situated at the N. foot of a steep rock, 1336 feet in height, the Acrocorinthus or Acropolis of Corinth, the summit of which is now, as in antiquity, occupied by a fortress. Corinth was early distinguished by the wealth, commerce, luxury, and refinement of her citizens; and its situation is highly advantageous, in a commercial point of view.

Corinth, Isthmus of, a neck of land that joins the Morea to Northern Greece. Its narrowest part measures little more than 3 m. across.

Cork, a county of Ireland, in the province of Munster, 80 miles in length, and 50 in breadth; divided into 137 parishes. The surface presents a great variety: the west part is wild and mountainous, bold and rocky; the north and east parts are rich and fertile, with ranges of high grounds running east and west; and in the north-west quarter there are many coal-mines. Iron and lead ores are also found in various places. The coasts abound with excellent harbours; and the principal rivers are the Blackwater and the Lee. Total pop. 516,046.—The capital of this county is a city of its name, which stands on the banks of the river Lee, over which are five stone bridges. Vessels of 120 tons come up to the quays; but those of heavier burden generally anchor at Queenstown (formerly Cove) on an island in the harbour. The foreign trade of Cork is only second in amount to that of Belfast. Pop. 78,382.

Cornhill, a village of Durham, near the Tweed.

Cornwall, a county that forms the south-west extremity of England. Its length from east to west is 80 miles; its breadth on the border of Devon is 48 m., but at Falmouth does not exceed 14; it terminates in two points, one called the Lizard, and the other the Land's End. It contains 945,920 acres, divided into nine hundreds and 217 parishes, and has 37 market-towns. The soil is not very fruitful, but the valleys yield plenty of grass, and the lands near the sea produce corn. The mines of tin, lead, and copper are numerous; and several sorts of stone are also found. In many cavernous parts of the rocks are transparent crystals, called Cornish diamonds. Cornwall abounds in Druidical antiquities, consisting of cairns and rock-ing-stones; the most celebrated of which is the Logan stone, about three miles from the Land's End. The principal rivers in this county are the Tamar, the Dart, and the Camel. Pop. 362,343.

Coro, a sea-port town and province of Venezuela, S. America; the inhabitants of which raise great numbers of sheep, manufacture cotton-stuffs, and cultivate excellent tobacco, cacao, and sugar.

Coromandel (Coast of), the east coast of Southern Hindoostan, extending along the Bay of Bengal, from Point Calimere to the mouth of the Kistna.

Coron, a sea-port on the S. coast of the Morea, Greece, now partly in ruins.

Corregio, a town of N. Italy, prov. Reggio, 10 m. NW. of Modena. Pop. 5000.

Corrèze, a dep. of France, formerly part of the Limousin. The climate is comparatively cold, the soil poor, and both agriculture and manufactures are in a backward state.

Corrib, Lough, a beautiful lake of Ireland, in the county of Galway: it is thickly studded with islands, many of which are inhabited.

Corrientes, a city of Brazil, in the province of Parana, with a fort. Lat. 27.30 S., lon. 59.0 W.—A cape on the east coast of Africa, south of Inhambane. Lat. 24.5 S., lon. 35.52 E.

Corsham, a town in Wiltshire. P. 3196.

Corsica, a large island in the Mediterranean, belonging to France, of which it forms a department. It is separated from Sardinia, on the south, by the Strait of Bonifacio. It is mountainous, but fruitful valleys are interspersed; the forests produce a quantity of excellent timber; and it has some fine lakes and rivers. It has always been famous for swarms of bees, and produces vast quantities of honey and wax; but cattle constitute the principal wealth of the farmers and peasantry. The mountains contain lead, iron, copper, and silver; and there are also mines of alum and saltpetre. The south coast abounds with beautiful coral. Bastia and Ajaccio are the chief towns. In person, habits, and disposition, the Corsicans bear a considerable similarity to the natives of Italy, but are said to be in the last degree revengeful and implacable. Pop. 240,000.

Cortona, a city and sea-port of S. Italy, in ancient times one of the richest, most populous, and powerful cities of Magna Græcia, but now retaining scarcely a vestige of its former glory. Lat. 39.7 N., lon. 17.9 E. Pop. 5000.—An Italian town, in the grand duchy of Tuscany. It is of very ancient origin, and was one of the twelve principal cities of Etruria. Pop. about 5000.

Corunna, a city and sea-port in Galicia, Spain, memorable as the place where Sir John Moore was killed, and the British army embarked, after the French forces under Marshal Soult had been repulsed with great loss. It has a good harbour, and some manufactures of glass, soap, starch, &c. Pop. 19,400.

Cossacks, a people of Russia, supposed to be of Tartar origin. Their habits are naturally unsettled and warlike, and they are extensively employed as light cavalry in the Russian army. They recognise a hetman, or chief—a title now vested in the heir-apparent to the Russian throne.

Cosseir, a port of Egypt, on the Red Sea; the emporium of trade with Arabia. Lat. 26.8 N., lon. 34.8 E.

Cossimbazar, a town of Hindoostan, prov. Bengal, and forming a suburb of Moorshedabad.

Costa Rica, a republic of Central America, embracing the narrow tract of land that extends southward from Lake Nicaragua and the river San Juan to the Isthmus of Panama. Its area does not exceed 21,000 sq. m.; but the position it occupies is highly favourable for commercial purposes, bordering as it does upon the shores both of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. Costa Rica has mines both of gold and silver, but its rich and abundant vegetable produce (inclusive of coffee, cocoa, tobacco, sugar, and numerous valuable woods) is a truer source of wealth.

The population is estimated at 215,000. The capital of the state is San José. Punta Arenas (upon the Pacific coast), and Matina, on the side of the Atlantic, are the chief seats of trade.

Costamboul, or Castamuni, a town of Anatolia, in Asiatic Turkey, 235 miles east of Constantinople.

Côte-d'Or, a department of France, including the north-east part of the old prov. of Burgundy. The vine culture is by far the most important branch of culture carried on in this dep., and immense quantities of wine are made in it; but the growth of wool is also much attended to, and bees are extensively reared. Iron and coal being abundant, there are numerous furnaces and smelting-houses, besides many distilleries, breweries, establishments for beet-root sugar, &c.

Côtes-du-Nord, a maritime dep. in the north of France, containing part of the old province of Brittany.

Cotswold Hills, a long tract of high ground in the east part of Gloucestershire; celebrated for a fine breed of sheep which take their name from it.

Cotopaxi, a volcanic mountain of Ecuador, S. America, one of the highest of the Andes, being 18,678 feet above the level of the ocean.

Cottbus, a town of Brandenburg, with a castle, in the Prussian States. Pop. 8216.

Cottenham, a village near Cambridge, famous for its cheese.

Covilha, a town of Portugal, prov. Beira. Pop. 6350.

Courland, a government of European Russia, annexed to the Russian dominions in 1795. Agriculture is the principal occupation of the people, but it is by no means a fertile country, and there are few manufactures.

Courtray, a fortified town of W. Flanders, particularly celebrated for its linen manufacture. Lat. 50.50 N., lon. 3.18 E. Pop. 19,500.

Coutances, a town of France, dep. La Manche, on the Soule. Pop. 7660.

Cowbridge, a corporate town in Glamorganshire. Pop. 1134.

Cowes (West), a sea-port town in the Isle of Wight, with an excellent harbour, much frequented by ships, to repair damages sustained at sea, and to water. The harbour and roadstead of Cowes form the rendezvous of the Royal Yacht Club, and the station where their annual regatta is held. The town is also much resorted to as a fashionable sea-bathing place, and there are daily steamers to Portsmouth and Southampton. Pop. 5730.

Cracow, a city of central Europe, the former ecclesiastical metropolis of Poland, and now included within the Austrian province of Galicia. It stands on the left bank of the Vistula, 150 m. SSW. of Warsaw. At the Congress of Vienna (1815) Cracow was formed, with a small adjoining territory, into a nominally independent republic, which the nations of Europe have since tacitly allowed Austria to absorb within her own dominions. Pop. 43,000.

Cranbourne, a town and par. in Dorset.

Cranbrook, a town in Kent. Pop. 4128.

Crayford, a village in Kent, near Dartford.

Crediton, a market-town in Devonshire. Pop. 4222.

Cree, a river of Scotland, which enters the head of Wigton Bay.

Cree Indians, a nation which once inhabited the interior of Georgia, in North America. They were very formidable, but their power is now greatly diminished.

Creetown, or Ferrytown, a small port in Kirkcudbrightshire, Scotland.

Crefeld, a town of Rhenish Prussia. It is the principal town in the Prussian dominions for the manufacture of silks, silk velvets, &c., and has also fabrics of woolen, cotton, linen, and lace. Pop. 53,000.

Crema, a town of Northern Italy. Pop. 9000.

Cremnitz, a town of Hungary, noted for its gold and silver mines. Pop. 6400.

Cremona, a city of North Italy, on the left bank of the Po, once highly celebrated for musical instruments, particularly its violins. It has a brisk trade in corn, flax, cheese, silk, oil, honey, wax, &c. Lat. 45.7 N., lon. 10.2 E. Pop. 31,000.

Crete (otherwise Candia), a large and celebrated island of the Mediterranean, belonging to Turkey, and forming the south boundary of the Grecian Archipelago. In shape it is long and narrow, and contains a population of about 210,000. It is divided into the three provinces of Candia, Retimo, and Canea. There are several mountain-ranges, which abound with grottos and caverns, and are replete with classic recollections. From 1821 to 1830, Crete suffered the worst evils of a sanguinary and devastating war, and was long in a very deplorable state. The chief products are oil, silk, wine, raisins, carobs, wool, oranges, lemons, wax, honey, linseed, and almonds. Cretan wine is frequently eulogised by ancient writers; and, under the names of Malmsey and Muscadine, considerable quantities were in the middle ages sent to England. The Cretans are stronger built than the inhabitants of the other Greek islands; but are said to have less intelligence and vivacity.

Creuse, a department of France, including the chief part of the old province of Marche.

Crewe, a town in Cheshire, and a great centre of railway-traffic, to which, indeed, it owes its origin. Pop. 17,800.

Crewkerne, a town in Somersetshire. Pop. 3557.

Crickhowel, a town in Brecknockshire. Pop. 1516.

Cricklade, a borough in Wiltshire. Pop. 1820.

Cricff, a town in Perthshire, Scotland. Pop. 3903.

Crinan Loch and Canal, in Argyleshire, Scotland—the former a small arm of the sea, on the W. coast. The canal crosses the narrow isthmus thence to the shore of Loch Fyne, and so avoids the circumnavigation of the Cantire Peninsula.

Crimea, a peninsula of Southern Russia, forming part of the government of Taurida. It is united to the mainland by the isthmus of Perekop, only 5 miles across. The Crimea has belonged to Russia since 1783, for three centuries prior to which it had formed a dependency of the Turkish empire—the government being left, however, chiefly in the hands of its native Tartar princes, or Khans. During the 13th and two succeeding centuries, the Venetians and Genoese maintained commercial establishments upon its shores, as the Greeks had done at a very much earlier period—six centuries before the Christian era. The bulk of the Crimean population—perhaps 200,000 in total number—are of Tartar race, and dwell in villages scattered over the steppe-land which forms a large portion of the territory. All the northerly and middle portions of the peninsula—two-thirds of its entire area—belong to the steppe, a level expanse of alternate pasture-land, or gravelly waste, with the recurrence of the seasons of drought and moisture. The southern division of the peninsula comprehends a mountain-region which reaches upwards of 5000 ft. in its higher elevations. The valleys interspersed amongst this tract, as well as the entire range of the south-eastern coast-line, possess a delightful climate and a fertile soil. The modern interest attaching to the Crimea is chiefly derived from the Anglo-French and Russian war of 1854-6, undertaken in support of the integrity of the Turkish power, when it was invaded by the united armies of France and England. The battle of the Alma, a small river on the western side of the peninsula, was the first event consequent on the invasion, and the destruction of Sevastopol—after a siege which was protracted over a period of nearly 11 months—its prime object. During the siege, the battles of Balaklava, Inkermann, and Chernaya, were successively fought, and have imparted undying celebrity to the plains and hill-sides of the Crimean peninsula.

THE POET, OF ALL SORTS OF ARTIFICERS, IS THE FONDEST OF HIS WORK.

Croagh Patrick, a mountain in Ireland, co. Mayo, 2510 feet high.

Croatia, a country of Europe, belonging to the house of Austria, except a small part east of the river Unna, subject to the Turks. Agram and Fiume are the chief cities of Austrian Croatia: Banialouka is the principal place in the Turkish portion.

Croix, St., a river of N. America, which forms the north-east boundary of the United States, and runs into the bay of Passamaquoddy.—One of the Virgin Islands, belonging to the Danes. It produces abundance of sugar. Lat. 17.15 N., lon. 65.23 W.

Cromarty, a sea-port and the capital of Cromartyshire. The harbour is one of the safest in the kingdom, with a commodious quay. This town has a coasting trade in corn, thread, yarn, fish, and skins of various sorts. Pop. 1491.

Cuba, the largest island in the West Indies, belonging to Spain. The soil is very fertile; there are many warm springs and copper mines in the mountains, and forests full of game. From E. to W., Cuba measures in length 750 miles, the breadth varying from 120 to 30 miles. The forests are of vast extent; mahogany and other hard woods are indigenous; the palm tribe are as remarkable for beauty as utility, and some of the vines are so strong as to destroy the largest forest trees in their parasitical embrace. Pine-apples, oranges, and other tropical fruits, are in great plenty. Cuba embraces a pop. little short of a million, the white portion of it numbering about 400,000. Of the coloured population, at least 350,000 are slaves—the remainder free negroes and mulattoes. Its natural resources are of the highest order, and it is not easy to exaggerate the political importance of the island when its size, geographical position, and great strength, are duly considered. The produce is excellent sugar, coffee, honey, Daghestan, a border-country of Europe and Asia, lying along the W. shore of the Caspian Sea, and including a portion of the mountain-region of the Caucasus. It is included within the limits of Russia. The inhabitants, partly of Tartar origin, are Mohammedans in religion. The chief towns are Derbend, Tarku, and Kouba.

Dago, an island in the Baltic. Lat. 58.44 N., lon. 22.56 E.

Dahomey, a kingdom of Western Africa, upon the Guinea coast. This country yields a plentiful supply of farinaceous vegetables and tropical fruits; also, indigo, cotton, sugar-cane, tobacco, palm oil, and a variety of spices; but many parts of it are overrun with lions, hyenas, leopards, elephants, and serpents of enormous size. The character of the Dahomans is marked by a mixture of the most savage ferocity and servility; and the most arbitrary forms of Eastern despotism seem to be mild and free, when compared with theirs.

Dal, or Dahl, a river of Sweden, which rises in the Norwegian mountains, and enters the Gulf of Bothnia.

Dahlak, the largest island in the Red Sea, near the coast of Abyssinia; remarkable for a pearl fishery. The inhabitants are blacks, and great enemies to the Mohammedans. Lat. 15.44 N., lon. 40.10 E.

Damascus, or Sham, a city of Syria, and the capital of a Turkish pashalic. It stands in a fertile plain, watered by the river Barrada. The most remarkable buildings are the caravansaries, which consist of long galleries supported by marble pillars, surrounding a large square court. The mosques and chapels, of which there are about 200, are handsome edifices; the grand mosque was formerly a Christian church. Damascus, though essentially a commercial town, is one of the sacred cities of the Mohammedans, and is remarkable as the only city of the East which has not dwindled from its former greatness. Several manufactures are carried on here; that of sabres and knives has been most famous, but silk and cotton stuffs, leather, and soap, are now the principal. Pop. about 140,000, of whom 12,000 are Christians, and 5000 Jews.

Dead Sea, an inland sea, or properly lake, of Syria, into which the river Jordan discharges its waters. It measures 46 m. in length from N. to S., and 11 m. in its greatest breadth. Its eastern and western shores are bordered by rugged and barren mountains, which rise to 2000 ft and upwards in height. The water of the Dead Sea is intensely salt and bitter, and possesses a specific gravity greater than that of almost any other known body of water. Asphalt, or bitumen, is found floating upon its surface, and is collected in lumps upon its western shore. No fish exist in the Dead Sea, owing to its intensely briny quality, and this circumstance, not less than the perfectly arid and lifeless aspect of its shores, justifies the appellation bestowed, both in ancient and modern times, upon this singular body of water. Another remarkable fact connected with the Dead Sea is its depression below the level of the adjacent country. It occupies the lowest portion of a deep and narrow ravine by which the Holy Land is traversed in the direction of N. and S., and the surface of its water is upwards of 1300 ft below the level of the Mediterranean. Its depth is seldom less than 1000 ft, and in one part exceeds 1300 ft. The Dead Sea is referred to in the Scriptures as the East Sea, and the Sea of the Plain: by the Romans it was known as Lacus Asphaltites, and also as Mare Mortuum.

upper courses of the rivers Ganges and Jumna lie through the province.

Delhi, the capital of the above province, situated on the river Jumna, is a celebrated city, anciently the metropolis of the Mogul empire. In the period of its splendour Delhi was a city of vast extent and magnificence, and it is still a place of consequence, well fitted to become a great inland mart for the interchange of commodities between India and the countries to the north and west. Cotton cloths and indigo are manufactured here. Shawls, fruit, and horses are brought from Cashmere and Cabool; and few of the ancient cities of Hindoostan rival modern Delhi in the wealth of its bazaars, or the activity of its inhabitants. Delhi was taken by a British army under Lake, in 1803, and again (after a severe struggle) in 1857, when it was held for a time by the insurgents, during the sepoy rebellion of that year. Pop. about 200,000.

Eccleshall, a market-town in Staffordshire. Pop. 4882.

Ecclesiastical States, Papal States, or States of the Church, a former political division of Italy, the secular inheritance of the Pope. In the greater portion of this territory vegetation is scarcely interrupted at any period of the year. The air in the mountain-districts is pure and salubrious; but the Campagna di Roma, and the Pontine Marshes, are at that season very unhealthy: the latter, especially, are subject to malaria. Little skill is evinced in agriculture; the crops being generally raised only for the supply of the cultivators. The rearing of live stock is the branch of rural industry on which the greatest dependence is placed. As for manufactures, there are none worthy of mention. The Pope has the title of Holy Father, and Holiness; and is elected from among the cardinals, each of whom is styled His Eminence. In 1798, the Papal territory was taken possession of by the French, who erected it into the Roman Republic. They obliged the Pope, Pius VI., to remove into Tuscany, and afterwards into France, where he died in 1799. His successor, Pius VII., was deprived by Napoleon I. of his temporal sovereignty; but, in 1814, the Pope was restored to his former dignity, and to his territories. Within a more recent period, during the papacy of Pius IX., this portion of Italy has been disturbed by political convulsion, and the Pope obliged, for a time, to become a fugitive from the Holy City (1848). The revolutionary movements of 1859-60 resulted in the annexation of the far larger portion of the Ecclesiastical States to the newly-formed kingdom of Italy, and reduced the temporal dominions of the Pope to a fourth of their previous dimensions. The protection of a French army maintained the semblance of Papal authority over this remaining portion down to the outbreak of the Franco-German war, in 1870. The whole is now incorporated within the kingdom of Italy.

Ecija, a city of Spain, prov. Seville, finely situated on the banks of the Xenil. In the time of the Moors it was a border town between them and the Christians, and has made a conspicuous figure in the tales of Spanish chivalry. Pop. 23,000.

Eckmuhl, a village of Bavaria, where, in 1809, the French army, under Napoleon, gained a decisive victory over the Austrians.

Eckrenforde, a sea-port in Denmark. Lat. 54.33 N., lon. 10.1 W. Pop. 3800.

Ecuador, an independent republic of South America, on the western side of that continent, and in part under the line of the equator—whence its name. Ecuador embraces a territory of 315,000 sq. m., thinly occupied by a pop. of 1,040,000. Its natural features are exceedingly varied, exhibiting, in the west, the snow-covered chains of the Columbian Andes, while towards the east are wide plains belonging to the basin of the Amazon. The agricultural wealth of Ecuador is very considerable, including the richest fruits of tropical climates, with cedars, ebonies, and numerous other ornamental woods. The sugar-cane, tobacco, cotton, maize, and cocoa, all flourish; with wheat, barley, and other grains, on the higher plateaus and valleys of the mountain-region. Nor are mineral treasures wanting, though the mines appear to be little worked. The native Indians, who form the most numerous portion of the pop., are the chief agriculturists, herdsmen, and miners of the territory. The whites are nearly all of Spanish descent. During the period of Spanish rule in the New World, this territory formed part of the Vice-Royalty of Peru. In 1819, after the war of independence, the three states now known as Ecuador, New Granada, and Venezuela, together formed the republic of Columbia, which became partitioned in 1831 into its present form.

Edam, a fortified town of North Holland; famous for its red-rind cheeses.

Eddystone, a rock in the English Channel, lying 14 miles SSW. from the middle of Plymouth Sound. On this rock a lighthouse was built in 1700, which was destroyed by a storm in 1703, and the projector perished in it. In 1709, another, built of wood, was erected, which was consumed by fire in 1755. Within four years afterwards, another was built, which also was burned down in 1770; and another, of stone, was completed in 1774, which has hitherto withstood the fury of the elements. The building, to the height of 33 feet from the foundation, is a solid mass of stones, ingrafted into each other; above this are four rooms, one over the other, and at the top a gallery and lantern. It is nearly 80 feet high.

Eder, a town of Hindoostan, prov. Gujerat. Lat. 23.53 N., lon. 72.3 E. Pop. 10,000.

Edenderry, a town in King's co., Ireland. Pop. 1850.

Edfou, a meanly-built town surrounding the superb ruins of an ancient temple on the west bank of the Nile, in Upper Egypt. It is the Apollopopolis Magna of the Romans.

Edjeware, a town in Middlesex. P. 705.

Edgworthstown, a town in Longford county, Ireland. Pop. 860.

Edinburgh, the metropolis of Scotland, in the county of its name. Its situation is eminently striking and romantic, being built on either side of a long valley, which runs in the direction of E. and W., dividing the two ridges of hill upon which the Old and New Towns respectively stand. The Old Town occupies the more southerly ridge, which terminates to the W. in the Castle Rock, 434 ft above the sea. The form of the Old Town resembles that of a turtle; the castle being the head, the High Street the ridge of the back, the narrow lanes (called closes) the shelving sides, and Holyrood House the tail. The palace of Holyrood House forms a grand quadrangle, with a court in the centre, surrounded by piazzas. Adjoining are the splendid ruins of an abbey, founded by David I., and converted by Charles II. into a royal chapel. The communication between the north and south parts of the city is by two noble bridges. The North Town has many new squares and streets, adorned with uniform and elegant houses; the buildings of the South Town are likewise neat and extensive; and the new College forms a very striking object. The university, founded by James VI. in 1581, is celebrated throughout the world; and its medical school, in particular, is entitled to the first rank. This city has also several valuable public libraries, literary and scientific institutions, public hospitals, dispensaries, charitable institutions, &c. On the east side of the city are Salisbury Craigs, which present a steep front of rock, in the form of an amphitheatre, 550 feet high, forming part of the hill, called Arthur's Seat. Two miles to the south are the remains of Craigmillar Castle, the residence of James V. during his minority, and of Queen Mary after her return from France, in 1562. The Calton Hill is the site of some interesting monuments, and there are several others in different parts of the town. Of the advantages of Edinburgh over most other large towns as a place of residence, or of its literary and political character, we have no room here to speak; and as for manufactures, it has but few. Pop. 196,500.

Edinburgh, or Mid-Lothian, a county of Scotland, 29 miles in length, and from 12 to 20 in breadth, divided into 31 parishes. The soil is fertile, and produces corn of all sorts, with plenty of grass; also coal, iron, limestone, and black marble. The principal rivers are the Esk, Leith, Almond, and Gala. Total pop. 328,335.

Egga, a town of Western Africa, on the right bank of the Niger, in the kingdom of Yarriba.

Egham, a par. and village in England, co. Surrey. Between the village and the Thames is the meadow called Runnymede, the scene of the conference between King John and the "bold barons" of England.

Egina (an. Ægina), an island of Greece, famous in antiquity for its naval power, wealth, and population, but now reduced to a low ebb. Lat. 37.45 N., lon. 23.59 E.

Eglisau, a town and castle of Switzerland, cant. Zurich.

Egremont, a town in Cumberland. Pop. 2377.

Egypt, a country of Africa, 550 miles in length, but generally not more (in its habitable portion) than 8 or 10 m. in breadth, being limited to the valley of the Nile. Though the air is naturally hot, and not very wholesome, it enjoys so many other advantages, that it has always been extremely populous. The inhabitants are composed of three different races of people: the Turks, lately the despotic masters of the country; the Arabs, who were conquered by the Turks; and the Copts, who are descended from the first Egyptians that became Christians. The complexion of the Egyptians is of a dusky brown; the richer sort spend nearly all their time in drinking coffee, smoking tobacco, and sleeping; and they are ignorant, proud, haughty, and ridiculously vain. The Copts are an ingenious people, and skilful in business. From March to November, the heat of the Egyptian climate is, to an European, almost insupportable; but the other months are more temperate. The south winds, which occur at intervals from February till the end of May, are called by the natives poisonous winds, or the hot winds of the desert, and are of extreme heat and aridity. It rains very seldom in Egypt; but that want is fully supplied by night dews, and the annual inundation of the Nile. When the water of the river retires, all the ground is covered with mud; then the corn is harrowed into it, and in the following March there is usually a plentiful harvest. But some lands are never fallow, and yield three harvests annually; particularly in Lower Egypt, where sowing and reaping are going on incessantly, wherever the water of the river can be obtained. No country in the world is better furnished with corn, flesh, fish, sugar, fruit, and all sorts of garden-stuff; and oranges, lemons, figs, dates, almonds, cassia, and plantains are produced in great plenty. The animals of Egypt are hyenas, antelopes, apes, beeves, horses, asses, crocodiles, &c.; eagles, hawks, pelicans, and water-fowls of all kinds. The pyramids of Egypt, justly accounted among the wonders of the world, are the most prominent amongst the many marvels of ancient art which the valley of the Nile exhibits; the largest, which is near Gizeh, is 461 feet in perpendicular height, with a platform on the top 32 feet square, and the length of the base is 746 feet; it occupies 11 acres of ground, and is constructed of such stupendous blocks of stone, that a more marvellous result of human labour has not been found on the earth. Here are also caverns, containing mummies, or embalmed dead bodies, which are found in coffins ranged in niches of the walls, and have continued there at least 4000 years. Egypt is politically a dependency of Turkey, constituting (since 1839) a pashalick hereditary in the family of the late Mohammed Ali, to whose energetic sway, during a period of forty years, the country is mainly indebted for its present comparative prosperity and restored importance. The pop. of Egypt amounted in 1871 to 5,200,000.

Ehingen, a town of Wurtemberg, on the Danube. Pop. 3000.

Elephanta, a small island on the west coast of Hindoostan, five miles east from Bombay. This island contains one of the most inexplicable antiquities in the world. A colossal stone elephant, now much decayed, appears on the landing-place, near the foot of a hill. From this an easy slope leads to a cave, excavated out of a rock, 80 feet long and 40 broad, the roof supported by rows of pillars 18 feet high. The sides are formed into compartments, which contain a great variety of carved figures relative to the Hindoo mythology; but the end of the cave is the most remarkable: it includes, with many subordinate figures, a gigantic Trimurti, or three-formed god: Brahma, the creator, in front; Vishnu, the preserver, on one side; and Siva, the destroyer, on the other. This island is also celebrated for some remarkable cave-temples.

Elephantina, a small island in the Nile, remarkable for the noble ruins with which it is covered, and also for its quarries of granite. It is inhabited by Nubians.

Enghien, a town of Belgium, in Hainault. Pop. 4000.

England, the southern part of the island of Great Britain. Its ancient name was Albion, which, in process of time, gave way to that of Britain, by which it was known to Julius Cæsar, and continued to be so till the year 829, when it received the name of England, and Egbert was crowned the first king. It is of triangular form; and, from the South Foreland, in Kent, which may be termed the east point of the triangle, to Berwick-upon-Tweed, which is the north, its length is 345 miles; from that point to the Land's End, in Cornwall, which is the west, it is 425; and the breadth thence to the South Foreland is 340. It contains 50,387 square miles, or 32,247,680 acres, exclusive of Wales, and displays a rich variety of surface and scenery. In some parts plains clothed in the richest verdure, watered by copious streams, and pasturing innumerable cattle, extend as far as the eye can reach; in others are seen gently rising hills and bending vales, fertile in corn, waving with woods, or interspersed with flowery landscapes; while other tracts furnish prospects of a more romantic and impressive kind. Towards the north it is hilly and somewhat rugged; the east coast is, in many parts, sandy and marshy; and a range of elevated land (the Pennine Chain of geographers), sometimes rising into lofty mountains, extends from the border of Scotland to the very heart of England, forming a natural division between the east and west sides of the kingdom. The English lakes are chiefly in the north-west counties, within the valleys of the Cumbrian mountain group. Among a great number of rivers, the most considerable are the Thames, Severn, Humber, Mersey, Medway, Trent, Ouse, Tyne, Tees, Eden, Avon, and Dee. Among the peculiarly distinguishing features of England must be reckoned the number and magnificence of the seats of the nobility and gentry; some venerable with ancient grandeur, others displaying all the taste of modern art combined with every capability for luxurious enjoyment; nor is the sylvan scenery deficient in the substantial requisites for the advancement of agricultural opulence, or the maintenance of rural hospitality. An admirable system of tillage, well-furnished farm-houses, and comfortable cottages, everywhere meet the eye, and evince that taste for neatness and rural beauty which is so characteristic of their several occupants. The size, wealth, and splendour of many of the cities, the extensive manufactures, and the indomitable industry of every class of artisans and traders, must also excite the admiration of all who compare England with the rest of Europe. With respect to climate, England is situate in the north part of the temperate zone; so that it enjoys but a moderate share of the genial influence of the sun. Its atmosphere is inclined to chilliness and moisture, subject to frequent and sudden changes; but the humidity and mildness of the climate maintain the fields in a constant state of verdure; being seldom covered with snow in winter, or blighted by long-continued frosts, and as rarely withered and parched by the droughts of summer. It is true that the most valuable productions, both animal and vegetable, have been imported from foreign countries. The horse has been trained up for all the various purposes of strength and swiftness; the horned cattle have been brought to the largest size and justness of shape; the different races of sheep are variously distinguished, either for uncommon size, goodness of flesh, or plenty and fineness of wool; the deer of its parks are superior in beauty of skin and delicacy of flesh to those of most countries; and even the several kinds of dogs have been trained to degrees of courage, strength, and sagacity, rarely to be met with elsewhere. The improvement in the vegetable products of this island is not less striking than is the animal: nuts, acorns, crabs, and a few berries, were almost all the variety of vegetable food which its woods could boast. To its unbounded commerce with other countries, and to the efforts of culture, England is indebted for corn, esculent roots, and plants, and all its garden fruits. The rivers and seas of England are stocked with a great variety of fish, which yield a plentiful article of provision to all ranks of people. The manufactures and commerce of this country are vast, various, and extensive; in the woollen, linen, cotton, and hardware branches, in particular, it has long maintained a preëminence.

Esquimaux, a people of North America, found in dispersed parties along the Arctic coasts of that continent, as well as in Labrador. They have no fixed abode, but rove from place to place, and have an antipathy to a residence near European settlements. They differ from the other native Americans, in being the only tribe that eat their food in a raw state. They are of a diminutive stature, generally lusty, and of a brown colour. Their chief employment is hunting and fishing; and they keep a number of large and fierce dogs, which drag their sledges in winter. The Esquimaux are savage, covetous, faithless, and ever disposed to mischief; and on this account little commerce is carried on with them.

Esquimaux Bay, situate on the south-east coast of Labrador, and in the north part of the Gulf of St Lawrence. Lat. 61.30 N., lon. 57.50 W.

It is joined, about 100 m. above its mouth, by the Tigris,—the united stream bearing the name of the Shatt-el-Arab. The Euphrates and Tigris enclose, in the upper portion of their courses, the plain of Al-Jezireh (the ancient Mesopotamia), and lower down flow through the level and marshy tract of Babylonia, or Irak-Arabi. The Euphrates passes, near the small modern town of Hillah, the ruins of ancient Babylon. Its capability for steam navigation has been ascertained by recent surveys.

Eure, a dep. of France, forming part of the former prov. of Normandy. Its chief town is Evreux.

Eure et Loir, formerly included in part within Normandy, and partly within Orléanois. Its chief town is Chartres.

Europe, the smallest of the divisions of the Old World, and, with the exception of Australia, the smallest among the continental divisions of the globe. It includes an area of 3,700,000 sq. m., and a pop. of 300 millions, which is relatively greater than that of any other portion of the globe, being in the ratio, throughout, of 80 inh. to every sq. m. Some of the countries of Europe, however, are greatly in excess of this ratio, as Belgium, which has 442 inh. to every sq. m., and England, which has 422. The surface of Europe exhibits every diversity of natural formation—in the south (and also in the north-western peninsula) high and rugged mountain-chains; in the west and centre, swelling hills and gentle undulations; in the east, vast plains. The Alps, its highest mountain-chain, reach in Mont Blanc the altitude of 15,730 ft. The greater number of the European rivers are navigable, and their streams furnish great facilities for inland communication. The Volga, which ranks first in point of length, has a course of 2200 m. The Danube is upwards of 1600 m. long, and the Rhine 760 m. But its variously-indented coast-line, numerous inland seas, and consequent development of maritime frontier, constitute the most characteristic feature in the physical geography of this division of the earth. By far the greater portion of Europe is within the temperate zone, and this division of the earth is free alike from the extremes of heat and cold that belong to other regions. The productions of the soil include nearly all the grains and fruits that are most useful to man, and the ordinary domestic animals are reared in the highest degree of perfection. The mineral wealth of Europe includes iron and coal in boundless abundance, with copper, lead, tin, and other useful metals, besides (chiefly in Russia and Hungary) a smaller proportion of the precious metals. The coal-fields of Great Britain alone supply two-thirds of the entire coal-produce of the globe. Those of Belgium rank next in this regard. The inhabitants of Europe are all whites, and, for the most part, much better made than the Africans, or even the Asiatics. With respect to their skill and improvements in arts, sciences, trade, navigation, and war, there can be no comparison between them and the rest of the world; the advanced civilization and superior influence of Europe are doubtless owing in no small degree to the superior capacity of her inhabitants, their ardour for enterprise, their invention, perseverance, and emulation. Europe is politically divided into 46 states, the five principal of which are, Great Britain and Ireland, France, Austria, Russia, and Prussia. Spain, Italy, Turkey, Sweden, and the kingdom of the Netherlands, take the second rank in political importance;

HE THAT BY THE PLOUGH WOULD THRIVE, HIMSELF MUST EITHER HOLD OR DRIVE.

HE THAT GIVES TO A GRATEFUL MAN PUTS HIS MONEY OUT AT COMPOUND INTEREST.

while Belgium, Portugal, Bavaria, Saxony, and Switzerland, may be regarded as third-rate powers. The German Empire, of which Prussia is the head, comprehends twenty-six distinct states. The forms of government are very various. Four of the European states assume the title of empire; eleven are kingdoms; seven grand-duchies; and the remainder principally duchies and principalities; with the republics of France, Spain, Switzerland, and San Marino. With the exception of the Turks (who are Mohammedans) and the Jews—scattered amongst all nations—the people of Europe are followers of the Christian religion, which embraces the three great divisions of the Protestant, Romish, and Greek Churches. The Romish Church holds sway chiefly in the south of Europe, the Greek in the east, and the Protestant in the west and north-west, while the central portions of the continent are divided between the followers of the Romish and reformed rituals.

Eustatius, St., a small island in the West Indies, belonging to the Dutch. It is a mountain in the form of a sugar-loaf, of which the top is hollow; tobacco is cultivated on its sides to the very summit; and hogs, kids, rabbits, and all kinds of poultry are produced in great abundance. Fez, a city of Morocco, formerly the capital of the independent kingdom of the same name, now of the province. It consists of two parts, the old and the new city; and is situated in a beautiful valley, the sloping sides of which are covered with fields, gardens, orange-groves, and orchards. The new city contains the imperial palace and about 100 mosques. Each street is devoted to a separate trade; and it is seldom that more than one species of goods is sold in a single shop. Morocco leather, woollen fabrics, gold and silver stuffs, gauzes, silks, sashes, jewellery, saddlery, fine carpets, arms, copper goods, &c. are manufactured here; the trade is brisk; and twice a year caravans cross the desert to Timbuctoo. Fez is considered one of the principal seats of Mohammedan learning, and schools are attached to many of the mosques. Lat. 34.6 N., lon. 5.1 W. Pop. 90,000.

Fezzan, a kingdom in the interior of Africa, having Tripoli on the north, and on the three other sides the desert. Its surface, though in some places diversified by hills, consists for the most part of sandy plains. Yet there are abundance of wells, from which the husbandman waters the productions of his lands; among these are the date, pomegranate, fig, maize, barley, &c.; but dates are the staple product, and form the principal food of the population and all domestic animals. A multitude of wild animals infest the country, and the air is crowded with mosquitos. The chief occupation of the people is commerce and the conveyance of goods, the situation of Fezzan being highly favourable for it. "The arrival of the great caravans forms a sort of jubilee in the cities of Fezzan; and on reaching Mourzouk, they find the sovereign seated in a chair of state, outside the city, to receive them." The heat of the climate in summer is intense; and in winter a penetrating north wind prevails, which drives to the fire even the natives of a northern country. Tempests of wind are frequent, which whirl up the sand and dust, so as to give a yellow tinge to the atmosphere. The natives are of a deep swarthy complexion; they are tall and well-shaped, but weakly, indolent, and inactive. In religion they are Mohammedans. The Sultan of Fezzan is tributary to the Pasha of Tripoli.

Fiano, a town of Italy, on the Tiber.

Fichtel Gebirge, a mountain-chain of central Germany, within Bavaria, towards its NE. frontier. Its principal summit, the Schneeburg, reaches 3450 ft.

Finland, a country formerly belonging to Sweden, but ceded to Russia in 1809, and now forming a grand duchy of that empire. It is divided into 8 läns, or counties. The natives on the coast are either Swedes or Russians, or a mixed race with the Finns. The true Finns have little intercourse with the inhabitants of the maritime district, but inhabit chiefly the eastern portions of the country, where they live in the midst of forests, by the borders of the lakes, and lead a mode of life exactly resembling that of the agricultural or settled Laplander, in houses that have a hole at the top to let out the smoke, and in one large room, which is occupied by the whole family. The forests are very extensive; bears, wolves, elks, deer, foxes, and beavers abound; and timber, deals, potash, pitch, tar, rosin, butter, skins, and fish are amongst the chief products of Finland. Pop. 1,798,000. Helsingfors is the seat of the provincial government.

Finmark, a province forming the north extremity of Norway, and including what is called Norwegian Lapland. The inhabitants are few, and derive their chief subsistence from fishing.

Flintshire, a small county of Wales, containing 197,760 acres, divided into five hundreds and 21 parishes. A lofty range of mountains rises on the west, and forms a bold frontier. The valleys are fertile, and contain coal and freestone; the hills are generally barren on the surface, but abound in lead, calamine, and limestone. This county produces good butter, cheese, and honey; of which last the natives make a wholesome beverage, called metheglin. The chief trade is mining and smelting; and the most noted rivers are the Clwyd, Dee, Serrion, Elwy, and Alyn. Pop. 76,312.

Flix, a strong town in Catalonia, Spain, 40 m. W. of Tarragona, and on the right bank of the Ebro.

Flodden, a village in Northumberland, near Wooler, famous for a battle fought between the English and Scots, in 1513, in which James IV. was killed.

Florence, the chief city of Tuscany, and, for a time, the capital of the kingdom of Italy. It is divided into two unequal parts by the river Arno, over which there are four handsome bridges. This city contains many magnificent palaces, churches, and other public buildings; and a number of splendid libraries, academies, and museums. The church of Santa Croce, called the Pantheon of Florence, is interesting from its containing the remains and tombs of four of the greatest men of modern times,—Michael Angelo, Galileo, Machiavelli, and Alfieri; and the church of San Lorenzo contains the mausoleum of the Medici family. But the great boast of Florence is its grand gallery, in which are preserved the choicest and most valuable specimens of art, including the matchless statue of the Venus de Medici, discovered in the 16th century, in the Villa Hadriana, near Tivoli. Many other first-rate works of the ancient sculptors are also in this collection; and the paintings comprise the most admirable specimens of all the best schools. The manufactures of Florence are chiefly silks, satins, gold and silver stuffs, and damask table-cloths; and it has a great trade in fruits and excellent wines. Among the many eminent men born here may be noticed: Cimabue, the father of painting in Italy; Giotto, another celebrated painter; Dante, the father of Italian poetry; Fingucra, the inventor of engraving; Petrarch; Cosmo and Lorenzo de Medici; Boccaccio; many eminent Popes, &c. Pop. 167,000.

France, one of the richest, most important, and powerful countries of Europe; having NW. and N. the English Channel, the Strait of Dover, and the North Sea; NE. Belgium, and the Rhenish provinces of Prussia and Bavaria; E. the territory of Alsace-Lorraine (Germany), Switzerland, and Italy; S. the Mediterranean and Spain; and W. the Bay of Biscay and the Atlantic. From the Pyrenées in the S., to Dunkirk in the N., its extent is about 600 miles, and nearly as much from the border range of the Vosges to the most western point of Bretagne; which province, it must be observed, extends above 100 miles further into the ocean than any other part of the country. The climate is temperate, and the soil productive of all the necessities of life, and, among its luxuries, of the most excellent wines. The principal rivers are the Seine, Loire, Rhone, and Garonne; and there are many others, which give name to the departments. The principal mountains are the Alps, Pyrenées, Cevennes, and Vosges. France was an absolute monarchy, governed by kings, from the time of Clovis, in 486, to the death of Louis XVI., in 1793. It was divided, prior to the great revolution which distinguished the closing years of the 18th century, into 34 provinces, very unequal in point of extent, and most of them coincident with the feudal divisions that belonged to an older period. (The Roman Catholic religion was then the established faith, and was supported by a numerous and wealthy hierarchy, embracing 18 archbishopricks and 113 episcopal sees — exclusive of Avignon, Carpentras, Cavaillon, and Vaison, which belonged to the Pope. The present political division of France is into 86 departments, one of which consists of the island of Corsica. There is no established Church, the ministers of every persuasion being supported out of the public purse; but the vast majority of the population are adherents of the Romish faith. In point of population, France ranks third among the states of Europe, being numerically inferior only to the empires of Russia and Austria. The ratio of increase in the number of its inhabitants has, however, been exceedingly small during the greater portion of the present century, and the census of 1856 showed that the numbers of the population had remained almost stationary during the preceding ten years. In 1872, the total number of the population amounted to 36,470,000. As respects the extent and value of its products, France ranks as a manufacturing country next to Great Britain; its silks are unrivalled, and its woollen manufacture is also of great value; it is not so, however, with the generality of manufactured products when compared with those of England, though in some light articles, in the brightness and durability of their dyes, and in the quality of their gloves, shoes, and other leathern goods, they bear away the palm. The foreign commerce of France embraces a vast variety of articles, and is only inferior in amount to that of Britain. Wine and brandy, with silk and woollen goods, laces, gloves, and various articles of jewellery and perfumery, constitute the chief items of export; raw silk and cotton, hides, iron, coal, timber, and tropical produce in general, those of import. Mr. McCulloch observes that "the present civil and criminal law of France has been embodied in codes drawn up, under the auspices of Napoleon, with singular perspicuity and brevity, and is honestly and impartially administered."

Georgia, a country of Asia, situated to the S. of Mount Caucasus, and embracing a considerable portion of the tract lying between the Caspian and Black Seas. The last reigning king ceded this country to Russia on his death, which happened in 1800; and, in 1802, it was made a Russian government. The hills of Georgia are covered with forests of oak, ash, beech, chesnut, walnut, and elm, encircled with vines, growing perfectly wild, but producing vast quantities of grapes. Cotton grows spontaneously, as well as the finest European fruit-trees; and rice, wheat, millet, hemp, and flax, are raised on the plains, almost without culture. The valleys afford the finest pasturage, the mountains abound in minerals, and the climate is healthy. The rivers of Georgia, being fed by mountain-torrents, are always either too rapid or too shallow for the purposes of navigation. The Georgians appear to have received their name from their attachment to St George, the tutelar saint of these countries. The women are celebrated for their beauty; but their air and manners are extremely voluptuous. The men have great skill in the use of the bow, and are deemed excellent soldiers; but are addicted to drunkenness. The superiority in the physical form of the Georgians, and other contiguous Caucasian tribes, and the low state of civilization that has always prevailed amongst them, explains the apparently unaccountable fact, that these countries have been, from the remotest antiquity down to our own times, the seat of an extensive slave-trade. The harems of Turkey and Persia were supplied by female slaves brought from Georgia, Circassia, and the adjoining provinces; and they also furnished male slaves to supply the Mameluke corps of Egypt and various other bodies with recruits. The Russians have put an end to this traffic; and they have also deprived the nobles of the power capitally to punish their vassals, and set limits to their demands upon them for labour and other services. The other inhabitants of Georgia are Tartars, Ossetes, Armenians, and Jews. The chief city is Tiflis.—One of the United States of America, 300 miles in length, and 210 in breadth, divided into 40 counties. The principal rivers are the Savannah, Alatomaha, and Chattahoochee. The winters in Georgia are very mild, and snow is seldom seen. The soil produces rice, cotton, tobacco, indigo, sago, maize, potatoes, oranges, figs, pomegranates, &c.; and the forests afford fine timber, but chiefly oak and pine. Gold, iron, and copper are found in considerable quantities, but rice and cotton are the great staples of Georgian industry. Georgia was one of the original 13 States that declared their independence of Britain, and the last settled of the number. Pop. 1,184,000. The nominal capital is Milledgeville, but Savannah is the largest town in the State.

Georgia Island, or South Georgia, a considerable island in the Atlantic, nearly under the 54th par. of S. lat., and between 36° and 39° W. long. Its coasts are high, and for the most part surrounded by icebergs. They abound in seals.

sian Poland, Galicia, Hungary; and N. by Denmark and the Baltic. For a long period it has contained a great many independent sovereign princes, and a number of imperial towns or small republics, the whole of them forming a great confederacy, governed by political laws, at the head of which was an emperor, whose power in the collective body, or diet, was not directive, but executive. The memorable contest with revolutionary France, which commenced in 1791, ended in the overturn of the old Germanic constitution. The treaty of Presburg, in 1805, gave Napoleon an opportunity of effecting a confederation of German princes, called "the Confederation of the Rhine," which was placed under the protection of the French emperor; and the success which attended his arms against the Prussians in 1807, and the Austrians in 1809, gave him the power of altering the territorial distribution of Germany at pleasure. Under these circumstances Francis II. (of Austria) renounced the style and title of Emperor of Germany; Napoleon created new kingdoms for members of his own family, &c., and incorporated the coasts of the German Ocean with the French empire. All this, however, was overturned when the tide of fortune turned against Napoleon on his retreat from Russia. The Germanic Confederation, of which Austria was the head, was established in 1815; its object being the maintenance of the security of Germany internally and externally, and the assertion of the independence and integrity of the respective states. The clumsy machinery of this confederation lasted just over half a century, until the growing rivalry between the houses of Austria and Prussia resulted in open war, and the arms of the former sustained a decisive overthrow in the battle of Königgratz (July 3d, 1866). The issue of the struggle was the dissolution of the existing Confederation, and the formation of a new league (North German Confederation) in its place. Austria was expressly excluded from this, and ceased to have any part in the affairs of the German nation, as a whole. Prussia became the head of the new league. Thus matters remained until the Franco-German war of 1870-71, when the victorious German powers conferred on the king of Prussia the hereditary title of Emperor of Germany. The new German Empire, of which Prussia is the head, comprehends twenty-six states, which have together an area of 209,204 Eng. sq. miles, and a population of 41,058,000. Every part of this extensive country does not enjoy the same mildness of temperature or fertility of soil; but, in general, the air is wholesome, and it produces abundance of all kinds of grain. The surface is tolerably level, yet it contains some mountains and large forests; the white mulberry-tree is very common, olives grow in several places; also chestnuts, oaks, beeches, firs, and fruit trees. Hemp, flax, hops, anise, cummin, tobacco, madder, woad, saffron, &c. are cultivated; and the wines of Germany are in high esteem. Salt-springs are very numerous, as well as medicinal springs and baths, both hot and cold. The chief rivers are the Danube, Rhine, Elbe, Weser, Main, and Oder. The language of Germany is a dialect of the Teutonic, which succeeded that called the Celtic. The three principal religions are Roman Catholic, the Lutheran, and the Calvinist; but Christians of all denominations are tolerated, and there are numerous Jews in all the great towns.

Germersheim, a fortified town of Bavaria, on the right bank of the Rhine, 40 m. N. of Carlsruhe.

Gernsheim, a town in Hesse Darmstadt, Germany, with a castle. Pop. 2800.

Gerona, a fortified city in Catalonia, Spain, chiefly noted for the number of its religious edifices. It has sustained numerous sieges, and been famous for the brave defence it always made; but especially for that it sustained under Alvarez, in 1809, for seven months, against the French. Lat. 42.5 N., lon. 2.40 E. Pop. 8200.

Gers, a department of France, the chief products of which are corn, wine, brandy, and wool. It includes the old province of Armagnac. Pop. 304,500.

Gevaudan, an old province of France, now forming the department of Lozère.

Gex, a town of France, department of Ain; noted for excellent cheese. Pop. 1400.

Geyser, the name of several curious intermitting hot springs in Iceland. The most remarkable is that called the Great Geyser, which spouts water to the height of 90 feet.

Ghadamis, or Gadamis, a town and oasis of Africa, in the northerly portion of the Sahara. Lat. 30.5 N., lon. 8.24 E. It has a mixed pop. of Arabs, Moors, and Negroes; and some caravan-traffic passes through it.

Ghat, a town and oasis in the Sahara, N. Africa; lat. 24.58 N., lon. 11.5 E. It is a considerable mart for slaves.

Ghauts, a chain of mountains in Western India, extending along the entire range of the Malabar coast. Their average height is from 3000 to 4000 ft, and their most elevated summits reach 8000 ft above the sea. The detached ranges of high ground upon the opposite side of the Indian peninsula are distinguished as the Eastern Ghauts, but they are much less elevated, and present less continuity. The word Ghauts signifies "gates," and applies, in strictness, to the defiles by which the mountains are traversed. The declivities of the Ghauts are thickly clothed with forests of teak and other trees.

Ghazipoor, or Ghazeepore, a district of British India, presidency Bengal, prov. Allahabad, highly celebrated for its produce of roses. It takes 200,000 flowers to produce the weight of a rupee in attar. This small quantity, when pure and unadulterated with sandal oil, sells upon the spot at 100 rupees (10l.). Rose-water enters into almost every part of the domestic economy of the natives of India, being used for ablutions, in medicine and cookery, for presents, &c.—The capital of the above district is a city on the north bank of the Ganges, with numerous mosques, and a superb palace, now almost in ruins: a little to the NE. is the mausoleum of the Marquis Cornwallis, who died here in 1805. Lat. 25.35 N., lon. 83.33 E. Pop. 7000.

Ghent, a city of Belgium, and cap. of East Flanders. The city is cut by many canals, which divide it into 26 isles, and over the canals are 300 bridges, some of which are of considerable size. The finest public building is the palace of the university, founded by William I. King of Holland, in 1816; but there are many good institutions and noble edifices. There are large cotton, linen, and woollen manufactures; also numerous gin distilleries, soap manufactories, breweries, tanneries, &c.; and it has a great trade in corn. Pop. 123,000.

Ghilan, a province of Persia, adjoining the SW. shore of the Caspian Sea. It is for the most part low and unhealthy, but produces abundance of fruit, oil, wine, rice, tobacco, timber, and excellent silk.

Ghiznee, or Ghuznee, a fortified city of Afghanistan, and formerly the capital of an extensive empire. It stands on a plain, nearly 7000 feet above the level of the sea; and is surrounded by stone walls, flanked with numerous towers. Ghiznee was taken by the British in 1839, and again in 1842.

Giant's Causeway. See Antrim.

Giaveno, a town of Sardinia, 16 m. W. of Turin, with manufactures of silk and linen, &c. Pop. 9000.

Gibraltar, a town and fortress belonging to Great Britain, situated in Andalusia, Spain, at the western base of a lofty rock, the ancient Calpe, which, with Abyla, on the opposite shore of Africa, formed "the Pillars of Hercules." The number and strength of the military works, and the vast galleries opened in the calcareous rock, excite admiration; and the fortress, though taken by surprise by the British, in 1704, is considered impregnable. Pop. 13,000.—A fortified town in the province of Maracaybo, Venezuela. Lat. 9.50 N., lon. 70.38 W.

Gien, a town of France, on the Loire, which is here crossed by a handsome stone bridge. Pop. 4750.

Giessen, a fortified town of Hessen Darmstadt, Germany. It has a few manufactures, but it is chiefly noted for its educational establishments, which constitute one of its principal resources. Pop. 7300.

Gigha, a small island, one of the Hebrides.

Gijon, a sea-port town of Spain, prov. Asturias, 20 m. NNE. of Oviedo. Pop. 6200.

Gila, river, a considerable affluent of the Colorado, which enters the head of the Gulf of California, on the W. side of N. America. Its course is within the territory belonging to the U. S. It is navigable for boats to 100 m. above its junction with the Colorado.

Gilbert Islands, a group in the Pacific, crossed by the line of the equator, and between the meridian of 172° and 174° E. They are low, of coral formation, and inhabited by a pop. of 60,000.

Gilford, a town in Down county, Ireland. Pop. 2884.

Gilghit, a small mountain-country of Asia, lying amongst the declivities of the Hindoo-Koosh, and the inhabitants of which form an independent nation. The chief town—of the same name—stands on the river Gilghit, which joins the Indus on its right bank, above Attock.

Gilolo, an island in the East Indian Archipelago, and the largest of the Moluccas. Lat. 0.45 N., lon. 128.22 E.

Gilsland, a village in Cumberland, England, frequented for its mineral waters. It lies 8 m. NE. of Brampton.

Gimont, a town in Gers, France. Pop. 2000.

Gingolph, St., a village in Valais, Switzerland, on the S. bank of the Lake of Geneva.

Giorgiev, a town of European Turkey.

Giovenazzo, a sea-port town of Naples, prov. Bari, situated on a high rock. Pop. 5500.

Girgenti, a city of Sicily, near the SW. coast of the island. Its situation is close to the ruins of the ancient Agrigentum, which was one of the largest and most famous cities of the ancient world. The modern city stands on the slope of an eminence, about 1200 feet above the sea, and contains, besides a large cathedral, 45 churches and 15 convents. Girgenti is the principal port for the shipment of sulphur. Pop. 17,000.

Gironde, a river of France, formed by the union of the Garonne and Dordogne, twelve miles north of Bordeaux, whence it runs into the Bay of Biscay, after a course of about 45 miles.—A maritime department in the SW. part of France, and the largest in the kingdom. There are a few hills in the E., but the surface is generally level; and all its W. portion is a vast sandy flat. The culture of the vine is by far the most important branch of industry carried on in this department; and hence we have our claret. The first growths of the red wines are denominated Lafitte, Latour, Château-Margaux, and Haut Brion—all of the highest excellence: the secondary and third-rate wines are generally too light for English palates. We, however, drink their white wines, which are Saunterne, Barsac, &c. The vineyards are said to be the property of about 12,000 families. Pop. 641,000.

Girvan, a town in Ayrshire, Scotland. Pop. 5921.

Gisors, a town of France, dep. Eure. Pop. 3100.

Giuliano, San, a town of Sicily, at the NW. extremity of the island, a few miles distant from Trapani. Near it is the lofty height of Mount Eryx, where anciently stood the celebrated temple of Venus. Jasper is found in the neighbouring mountains. Pop. 10,000.

Giurgevo, a mean though large town of Wallachia, on the Danube. Pop. 15,000.

Givet, a fortified town in Ardennes, France, situated on both sides of the Meuse. Pop. 4000.

Gizeh, or Ghizeh, a small town of Egypt, near the left bank of the Nile, and 4 m. W. of Cairo. In its immediate vicinity are situated the largest of the Pyramids and the Sphynx.

Glamis, a town in Forfarshire, Scotland. Pop. 32.

Glamorganshire, a county of Wales, 48 miles in length and 26 in breadth, containing 526,080 acres, divided into 10 hundreds and 125 parishes, and having one city and five market-towns. The N. side is mountainous; but, to the south, it bears large crops of corn, and very sweet grass. Cattle abound in all parts; there being valleys among the mountains that yield good pasture. The other commodities are lead, coal, iron, and limestone; and the principal rivers are the Rumney, Taff, Elwy, Neath, and Tawe. Pop. 397,859.

Glanford-bridge, or Brigg, a town in Lincolnshire; which has a good trade in corn, coal, and timber. Pop. 1692.

Glanworth, a town in Cork co., Ireland.

Glaris, or Glarus, a small canton of Switzerland, surrounded by the Alps, except towards the north. The chief trade is in cattle, cheese, and butter. Pop. 35,150.—The town of Glarus, the cap. of the canton, stands near the river Linth, which discharges its water into the Lake of Wallenstadt, and the valley of which is now a scene of busy industry, containing numerous cotton-mills and print-works. Pop. 4700.

Glasgow, the most important manufacturing and commercial city of Scotland, co. Lanark, situated on either bank of the river Clyde, which is here crossed by five bridges. It is the seat of a university, which dates from the middle of the 15th century, and possesses a venerable cathedral, founded in 1123, and dedicated to St Mungo, the patron saint of the city. The manufactures of Glasgow are of great variety and importance. Cotton and iron are the great staples, with textile fabrics of every description, chemical works, glass, pottery, &c. In the amount of its foreign commerce, Glasgow is surpassed only by Liverpool and London, and its mercantile relations extend to every part of the world. It is, in fact, the great outlet and mart for the manufacturing industry of Scotland. The extent of its Irish and coasting-trade is also very considerable. Glasgow is of early origin, dating at least as far back as the sixth century; but the tide of its commercial prosperity can scarcely be said to have set in earlier than the commencing portion of the 18th century. During the last sixty years its progress, both in commerce and manufactures, has been exceeding rapid, and has been accompanied by a correspondent increase in extent and population. At the present time, the extent of Glasgow is not less than 3 m. in the direction of E. and W., and 2 m. in that of N. and S. Its population, in 1871, amounted to 477,144, which is much greater than that of any other city in Scotland, and is not surpassed by any city in the United Kingdom, with the exception of Liverpool, Manchester, and the metropolis.

Glastonbury, a town in Somersetshire, 22 m. S. W. of Bath; seated near a high hill, called the Tor, on which is a tower that serves for a seamark. Here are considerable ruins of a famous abbey, which occupied an area of 60 acres. The George Inn was formerly a hospital for the accommodation of pilgrims who came to visit the abbey, and to see the holy thorn, said to have been planted by Joseph of Arimathea, and to blossom on Christmas Eve. The last abbot was hanged on the top of the Tor, by order of Henry VIII., for not acknowledging his supremacy. Pop. 3668.—A town of Connecticut, U. S.

Glatz, a fortified town of Prussian Silesia, the cap. of a circle of the same name.

It stands on the river Neisse, near the Austrian frontier. Its manufactures consist of woollen cloth, damasks, plush, ribands, muslins, leather, &c. Pop. 9800.

Glauchau, a town of Saxony, on the river Mulde, 54 m. WSW. of Dresden. Pop. 10,300.

Gleiwitz, a town of Prussian Silesia, 40 m. SE. of Oppeln. Pop. 8200.

Glencoe, a vale in Argyleshire; noted for the massacre of its unsuspecting inhabitants, the Macdonalds, in 1691, by order of William III.

Glenelg, a town in South Australia, on the shore of St. Vincent's Gulf, 8 m. SW. of Adelaide.—A river of Victoria (Australia), flowing into the Southern Ocean, near the border-line between the province of Victoria and South Australia.

Glenluce, a town in Wigtonshire, Scotland.

Glogau, a town of Prussian Silesia, on the left bank of the Oder, below Breslau. Pop. 15,000.

Glossop, a manufacturing town of England, co. Derby, near the line of railway between Manchester and Sheffield. The parish contains numerous cotton-mills, also woollen and paper-mills, &c. Pop. 17,046.

Gloucestershire, a county of England, 60 miles long and 26 broad; it contains 803,840 acres, divided into 28 hundreds and 338 parishes, and has two cities and 26 market-towns. The air is sharp in the east, called the Cotswold, but very mild in the rich vale that occupies the centre, through which the river Severn flows. The west part is varied by hill and dale, and is chiefly possessed by the forest of Dean. The staple commodities are woollens and cheese; the principal rivers are, the Severn, Warwickshire Avon, Lower or Bristol) Avon, Wye, Thames, Coln, and Lech. Total pop. 534,640.

Gloucester, a city, and the capital of the above county, situated on the river Severn. It has ten parish churches, besides the cathedral, which exhibits the various gradations of style during the great era of church architecture, from the Norman conquest till the close of the 15th century. It has five hospitals, two free-schools, a county gaol, a shire-hall, &c. Pin-making was formerly carried on here to a great extent, but it has materially declined. Ships come up the Severn to the bridge; but the navigation being circuitous, a canal is made hence to Berkeley, at the head of which is a basin fit for the reception of vessels of above 500 tons burden. Pop. 18,341.

Gloucester, a sea-port in Essex county, Massachusetts; it is one of the most considerable fishing towns in the United States.—A fertile town of Virginia.—A town of New Jersey, on the Delaware.—Another in Cumberland county, Maine.

Goar, St., a town of Prussia, on the left bank of the Rhine, 20 m. above Coblenz. Pop. 1480.

Gobi, or Shamo, an extensive desert region of Central Asia, stretching through 1800 m. in the direction of its length (SW. to NE.), with a breadth of from 300 to 400 m. It is included within the limits of the Chinese Empire, and is thinly occupied by wandering tribes of Mongol or Tartar origin. The Gobi exhibits for the most part grassy plains, intermixed with arid tracts either of barren rock or shifty sand.

Godalming, a town of Surrey, on the Wey; it has manufactures of stockings and coarse woollen cloths. Pop. 2444.

Godavery, a large river of Hindoostan, which has its sources in the Western Ghauts, and flows into the Bay of Bengal.

Godmanchester, a corporate town in Huntingdonshire, parted from Huntingdon by the river Ouse. When James I. came through it from Scotland, the inhabitants met him with 70 ploughs, drawn by as many teams of horses: for which novel sight he granted them a charter. Pop. 2363.

Goeree (or Goedereede), an insular tract on the coast of Holland, forming, with Overflakke, which it adjoins, one of the islands at the mouth of the Meuse. It contains the decayed town of Goedereede.

Goes, a fortified town of Holland, prov. of Zealand, trading in salt and corn. Pop. 4700.

Gohud, a town and fort of Hindoostan, in the Gwalior territ., and 28 m. NE. of Gwalior.

Gojam, a prov. in the south-east of Abyssinia. It is flat, abounds in pastures, and is very populous.

Golconda, a fortress and ruined town of Hindoostan, in the province of Hyderabad. It was formerly a considerable depôt for diamonds, brought thither chiefly from Balaghaut, to be polished and fashioned for sale.

Gold Coast, a maritime country of Guinea, where the British, and also the Dutch, have several forts and settlements. It is about 220 miles from west to east, between the rivers Assinee and Volta; and includes several districts, seven of which are dignified with the title of kingdoms. The natives are generally very rich, as they carry on an extensive trade with the Europeans for gold; and many of them are employed in fishing and in cultivating rice, which grows in incredible quantities. Most of the inhabitants go naked: and those who are best clothed have only some yards of stuff wrapped about their middle. Cape Coast Castle is the capital of the British possessions on the Gold Coast.

Goldau, a valley in Switzerland, cant. Schweitz, between the mountains of the Rigi and the Rossberg. The fall of a large portion of the latter mountain (by a landslip), in 1806, filled up a large portion of the valley, and overwhelmed the village of the same name, which it had previously contained.

Goldberg, a town of Prussian Silesia, on the Katzbach, memorable for a decisive victory gained in the neighbourhood, August 26, 1813, by Marshal Blucher, over the French. It has manufactures of woollen goods, stockings, gloves, &c. Pop. 7100.

Great Salt Lake, a lake in the Utah (or Mormon) Territory, U. S. It is about 75 m. long, with an irregular outline, and derives its name from the great saltiness of its water, which is void of animal life of any description. It lies at a level of 4200 ft above the sea, and receives a stream from the smaller Lake Utah, which is 100 ft higher in level.

Great Salt Lake City, the cap. of the Utah Territory, U. S., and the chief seat of the Mormon community. It is a short distance from the SE. shore of the above lake, and on the banks of the river which issues from Lake Utah. Great Salt Lake City was founded in 1847, on the settlement of the Mormons there, after their expulsion from Nauvoo (Ill.) Pop. 12,800.

Greece, a kingdom of SE. Europe, established in 1832, previous to which it had formed for some centuries a provincial division of the Turkish Empire. The present kingdom of Greece embraces only part of the country known as Greece in ancient times, but is inclusive of those portions of the Greek territory which occupy the most conspicuous place in the pages of history. Athens and Corinth, Thebes and Argos, Sparta and Elis, are within its limits. The Ionian islands, previously under British rule, were relinquished in favour of Greece in 1864. With this addition, the kingdom of Greece comprehends an area of 20,234 sq. m., and a population of 1,458,000. Its three great divisions are—Northern Greece, a narrow strip of territory to the northward of the Gulf of Corinth; the Morea, or ancient Peloponnesus; and the Islands, of which the largest is Negropont, the ancient Eubœa. Greece is a beautiful country, abounding in fine natural objects—alternate mountain-peaks and ravines, hills and valleys, wooded headlands and shaded torrent-streams. Its plains are of limited extent, and none of its rivers are of sufficient size to be navigated. A large portion of the country (especially in the Morea, which includes the Arcadia of the classic world) is fitted rather for pastoral pursuits than for the use of the plough. The olive grows in every part of the country, and both the mulberry and the currant-grape are extensively reared. Tobacco and cotton are also grown. But the pursuits of industry are generally in a backward condition. There are few manufactures, but Greek skill in the arts of dyeing and embroidery has been perpetuated from ancient times, as likewise has the fondness of the Greek for the sea, and his success in the pursuits of the trader. The Greeks are the universal agents in the trade of the Levant, and are to be found in every sea-port town around its shores. The exports of Greece are cotton, corn, currants, silk, olive-oil, honey, wax, gum, &c.: the imports, chiefly manufactured goods and colonial produce. The present ruler of Greece is George I. (a prince of the reigning house of Denmark), who, in 1863, accepted the throne from which a revolutionary movement had expelled the prior king, Otho I. The government, which Greencastle, a town in Pennsylvania.

Greenfield, a town of Massachusetts, chief of Franklin county.

Greenland, an extensive insular region towards the north pole, and regarded as belonging to North America. It was discovered in 983, by some Norwegian adventurers from Iceland, and was named Greenland, from its superior verdure to Iceland. They planted a colony on the eastern coast; and the intercourse between this colony, Iceland, and Denmark, was continued till the beginning of the fifteenth century; when, by the gradual increase of the arctic ice upon the coast, the colony became inaccessible, and the records of it disappear from history. In more recent times, the western coast was chiefly explored by Davis and other English navigators. The country is inhabited by Esquimaux, as far as 76° N. lat.; and the Danes possess various settlements in the SW. part. The settlers rear a considerable number of sheep, for whose winter subsistence they cut the grass in summer, and make it into hay. The short summer is very warm, but foggy; and the northern lights diversify the gloom of winter, which is very severe. The exports consist chiefly of whale oil, seal, bear, and rein-deer skins, eider-down, &c. The native Esquimaux, who are seldom much above 5 ft in height, display considerable skill in the structure of their fishing-boats and hunting implements. Their houses are from 6 to 8 ft high, varying in size according to the number of families they are intended to accommodate, and divided by skins into different compartments. Their food is principally the dried flesh of the seal, with a little game and fish; coffee, tobacco, snuff, and brandy are esteemed the greatest luxuries.

Greenlaw, the county-town of Berwickshire, Scotland. Pop. 800.

Greenock, a sea-port of Renfrewshire, Scotland, on the Clyde, below Glasgow; with a great trade in the Newfoundland and herring fisheries; also ship-building, the manufacture of steam-engines, chain cables, anchors, &c., besides many other branches of industrial occupation, which are extensively carried on. James Watt was a native of Greenock. Pop. 57,138.

Greensted, a village in Essex, a mile west of Ongar. This place is remarkable for a little church (built prior to the conquest), the walls of which are formed of the trunks of trees.

Greenwich, a town in Kent, adjoining London. It is seated on the Thames; and is famous for a magnificent hospital, formerly used as an asylum for disabled seamen, and within which is included a naval school. This building, originally intended for a palace, was commenced by Charles II., who built one wing; in the reign of William III. it was completed. Greenwich

Park contains nearly 200 acres; it is well stocked with timber and deer, and furnishes from its higher part magnificent views of the metropolis and its vicinity. It also contains the national observatory, built by Charles II. on the summit of a hill, whence English geographers compute the longitude. Pop. (of par. bor., which includes the neighbouring towns of Deptford and Woolwich), 169,361.

Greifenberg, a town of Prussia, prov. of Pomerania, the cap. of a circle of the same name. It is 41 m. NE. of Stettin. P. 4400.—A town of Prussian Silesia, 35 m. SW. of Leignitz. Pop. 2700.

Guatemala, a country of Central America, one of the five states that formed, for a time, a nominal confederacy under that designation (see America, Central). It is the most considerable of the number, and has an area little short of 53,000 sq. m., with a pop. of 970,000, three-fourths of them Indians or people of mixed descent. The whites are principally of Spanish origin, the country having, prior to 1823 (with all the neighbouring portions of the New World), constituted a dependency of the Spanish crown. Since 1839, the Union between Guatemala and the other States of Central America has been dissolved, and it is now a sovereign republic. Guatemala possesses an extensive range of coast upon the side of the Pacific, with a smaller outlet upon the Atlantic shores. The country is chiefly mountainous, and possesses great abundance both of mineral and vegetable wealth. Cochineal is its chief article of commercial produce: cocoa, tobacco, sugar, coffee, vanilla, and cotton are also grown. Guatemala is divided into seven departments. The city of New Guatemala is its capital.

Guatemala, New, a city of Central America, the cap. of the above state, situated on a high plain, 4372 ft above the sea, and 45 m. distant from the Pacific coast. It was founded in 1776, in consequence of the nearly total destruction of Old Guatemala by a violent earthquake, three years before. Pop. 60,000.—Old Guatemala lies 21 m. to the SW. of the newer city of that name, in a beautiful valley, and has still 9000 inhab. At a few miles distant, and upon either side of the valley in which the city stands, are the volcanoes of Fuego and Agua, the former 13,160 ft, and the latter 12,260 ft, above the sea.

Gueldern, a town of Rhenish Prussia, 27 m. NW. of Dusseldorf. Pop. 4000.

Guernsey, an island in the English Channel, lying off the north coast of France, and forming one of the group known as the Channel Islands, which have been a dependency of the English crown ever since the period of the Norman Conquest. Guernsey is 36 m. in circuit, and is surrounded by high rocks. The soil is verdant, though hilly; and is remarkable for its small breed of cattle. Formerly Guernsey was noted for a most extensive contraband trade, and was used by merchants as a depôt for foreign wines and other goods. The exports consist chiefly of cider, apples, potatoes, building-stone, and wine; the imports are wheat and flour, sugar, coffee, and British manufactures. The only town is Peter-le-Port.

Guiana, an extensive country of South America, large portions of which are now included within Brazil and Venezuela. The only territories to which the name is now applied are three contiguous provinces, which form possessions of Britain, the Netherlands, and France, and which are respectively known as British, Dutch, and French Guiana. All three, bordered on the north by the waters of the Atlantic, stretch inland to the high range of the Parime Mountains, or Sierra Acaray, by which they are divided from the empire of Brazil. British Guiana is the largest of the three provinces, and has an area of not less than 76,000 sq. m., with a pop. (not including the native Indian race) of 163,000. It borders upon Brazil and Venezuela upon the S. and W.; on the E., the river Corentyn divides it from Dutch Guiana. The climate of all three of the Guianas is strictly tropical, two rainy seasons, with intervening periods of drought, marking out the divisions of the year. Sugar, coffee, and cotton, are staple productions of each; pepper, cloves, cinnamon, and nutmegs, being added to the list of articles exported from French Guiana. The agricultural resources of either territory are very great, but only very small portions of the soil have been hitherto brought under the planter's care. A large proportion of the population (forming, in British and Dutch Guiana, the great majority) are negroes, who work in the plantations. There are also tribes of native Indians. The rivers of British Guiana are the Essequibo, Demerara, and Berbice, besides the Corentyn on its eastern border—all of them navigable by boats for considerable distances upward. Georgetown, at the mouth of the Demerara, is the capital of the colony.—Dutch Guiana extends from the Corentyn eastward to the river Maroni, and includes the valley of the river Surinam. It has an area of 38,500 sq. m., with a pop. (exclusive of Indians and Maroons) of about 60,000. Paramaribo, a short distance above the mouth of the Surinam, is its capital.—French Guiana extends along the coast between the rivers Maroni and Oyapok, embracing 30,000 sq. m. of territory, with a pop. stated at between 300,000 and 400,000. The town of Cayenne, situated on the island of that name, adjoining the coast, is the capital.

Guildford, the county-town of Surrey,

A JOKE NEVER GAINS OVER AN ENEMY, BUT OFTEN LOSES A FRIEND.

situated on the river Wey: it has a great trade in timber and corn. Pop. 9106. — A town in Connecticut, U. S.

Guimaraens, a town of Portugal, prov. Entre Duero-e-Minho. Lat. 41.24 N., lon. 8.14 W. Pop. 8260.

Guinea, a large region of Africa, little known except the coast, which extends along the Atlantic upwards of 2600 miles. It lies between 10° N. and 12° S. lat., and is divided into Upper and Lower Guinea. The climate is very unhealthy for Europeans. The negro states, amongst which it is for the most part divided, are often at war with each other, when the people taken, on both sides, are sold for slaves. The chief article of commerce obtained from the Guinea coast to the northward of the equator, is palm-oil, to which are to be added gold-dust, ivory, gums, ostrich-feathers, and various dye-woods. To the southward of the line, the chief traffic is in slaves. The British, French, and Portuguese have factories upon the coast.

Guinea, New, or Papua, a large island in the Pacific Ocean, to the north of Australia, from which it is separated by Torres Strait; extending more than 1200 miles, by a medial breadth of perhaps 300. The coasts are generally lofty; and, in the interior, mountain rises above mountain; but the whole appears covered with such luxuriance of wood and herbage as can scarcely be conceived. It is the native country of the birds of paradise. The inhabitants of the northern part are called Papuans; they have the features and complexion of the Malays, but are, in general, of horrible appearance and great ferocity. The chief commerce is with the Chinese, from whom they purchase instruments and utensils; their returns are ambergris, tortoise-shell, small pearls, birds of paradise, and other birds, which the Papuans dry with great skill.

Hamburg, a commercial city of Germany, and independent member of the new German Empire (1871), situated on the right bank of the river Elbe, about 70 miles above the sea, and at the point where it is joined by the stream of the Alster, which expands into two considerable basins—the inner and outer Alster. It had formerly extensive fortifications, which were razed after the wars of the French Revolution, and their circuit converted into promenades. Besides its older portions embraced within this circuit, Hamburg has extensive suburbs: Altona, which is within the prov. of Schleswig-Holstein, immediately adjoins its western limit. Hamburg is the great commercial outport of Germany, and carries on an immense foreign as well as inland trade. Amongst its numerous public buildings, the churches of St. Michael and St. Nicholas, the Stadt Theater, the Exchange, the Senate House, and the Orphan Asylum (Allgemeine Krankenhaus) are conspicuous.

There are extensive manufactures of cotton and other goods, sugar-refineries, tobacco-works, breweries, distilleries, &c. Pop. 240,000.

Hampshire, or Hants, a county of England; extending, exclusive of the Isle of Wight, 42 miles from north to south, and 38 from east to west. Including the island, it contains 1,041,920 acres, divided into 10 hundreds and 311 parishes, and has one city and 20 market-towns. This county has a great variety of soils, but the principal part is chalk. The Dorsetshire border has large tracts of heath; and towards the sea are great quantities of marshland, but very fertile; and all the remainder of the land is excellent. Besides wheat, barley, and hops, it is famous for bacon, honey, and timber; the last in particular, on account of its great woods, the chief of which are the New Forest and the Forest of Bere. Of the rivers, the principal are the Avon, Test, Itchen, and Stour. Pop. 544,684. The county-town is Winchester.

Hampshire, New, one of the United States of America, 160 miles in length, and 60 in breadth. It is divided into six counties, the chief rivers are the Connecticut, Merrimac, and Piscataqua; and it has several lakes, the largest of which is called the Winnipiseogee. The surface near the sea is generally low, but, advancing into the country, it rises into hills, mountains, and barren rocks. The White Mountains are the loftiest; Mount Washington, the highest, being 7000 feet above the level of the sea. The hills and sides of the mountains are covered with fine trees; and the best lands are along the borders of the rivers. Total pop. 315,000.

Hanley, a town in Staffordshire, within the tract called the Potteries. Pop. (with Shelton, which it adjoins) 39,976.

Hanover, a prov. of Prussian Germany, and formerly a distinct kingdom, the history of which, from its connexion with the House of Brunswick, it may be desirable to notice. The reigning family derived its origin from the union of the Marquis d'Este, in the 11th century, with a wealthy princess of Bavaria, the issue of which received the surname Guelph, from his maternal ancestors, and inherited the dukedom of Bavaria. Henry the Lion, born in 1129, and well known in the history of the Crusades, was the first Guelph duke of Brunswick. He married a daughter of Henry II., king of England; and from this marriage both the houses of Brunswick and Luneburg are descended. But the claim of the elder branch of the house of Brunswick to the crown of England was derived from the union of Ernest Augustus with Sophia, grand-daughter of James I. of England; the issue of which marriage was George Louis, who became king of England in 1714. Hanover was an electorate, containing the duchies of Zell, Lauenburg, Bremen, Luneburg, and the principalities of Verden and Grubenhagen. In 1803, the French obtained possession of all these states, and, soon afterwards, they were given as a province to Prussia; but, in 1813, His Britannic Majesty's government was reestablished. In 1815, the duchy of Lauenburg was ceded to Denmark, and some small territories to Prussia and Oldenburg. The remaining states, with Osnaburg, Hildesheim, East Friesland, Lower Munster, and some petty districts, were formed into the kingdom of Hanover, of which George III. of Britain was the first king, in 1815. On the death of William IV., by virtue of the Salic law, which prohibits female succession, it passed to Ernest, duke of Cumberland, as next male heir. The separate existence of Hanover was terminated by its incorporation with Prussia, after the Austro-Prussian war of 1866. The Harz and other elevated tracts occupy the southern portion of the province; the rest is a level plain, diversified by a few sand hills. The principal rivers are the Elbe, Weser, Ems, Aller, and Leine. —The capital is a fortified city of the same name, on the Leine; well built, and has manufactures of lace, stockings, cotton goods, ribands, leather, and snuff. Lat. 52.22 N., lon. 9.44 E. Pop. 87,000. —A town of New Hampshire, U. S. —Another in Pennsylvania. —Another in Virginia.

Hayti (known also as St Domingo), the largest, next to Cuba, of the West India islands. It formerly belonged jointly to Spain and France; the greater portion subsequently to France alone. In 1803, the negro population, after a series of bloodshed and atrocities almost unparalleled, expelled the French and effected their own independence. But the island was not wholly in the hands of the blacks till 1821, when the Spanish portion placed itself under the government of Boyer, who then became master of the whole of Hayti. More recently, the island has become divided into two distinct states—the Republic of Hayti, which embraces the western portion, and the Dominican Republic, which includes the eastern and former Spanish portion. The town of Port au Prince is the capital of the former; St Domingo, of the latter territory. The total pop. of the island is estimated at 760,000, of whom 560,000 are subjects of the Haytian Empire, and 200,000 of the Dominican republic. The soil of Hayti is fertile, and the climate extremely hot; the mountains abound in excellent timber, and in mines of lead, iron, copper, silver, &c.; but the land is ill cultivated, and the export trade in sugar, coffee, and other productions is in a depressed condition. Besides St Domingo and Port au Prince, the other chief towns on the island are Cape Haytien, Cayes, Jaquemel, and Gonaives.

Haytien (Cape), a sea-port town of Hayti, on the north side of the island, and one of the principal cities within the late empire (now republic) of Hayti. During the former period of French dominion, it bore the name of Cape Francois, and was accounted one of the finest and most flourishing cities in the W. Indies. Half the town is now in ruins, and the trade (chiefly with the U. S.) is much less than formerly. Pop. 9000.

Heaton Norris, a township in Lancashire, on the Mersey. Pop. 16,333.

Hebrides, or Western Islands, a name given to a great number of islands lying off the west coast of Scotland, and included within the counties of Ross, Inverness, and Argyle. Gaelic or Celtic is the language spoken throughout the whole extent of the Hebrides. The climate is more humid and variable than in any other part of the British dominions, and in the winter season the islands are often visited with destructive storms and tempests. The rearing of black cattle and sheep is the most extensive and profitable employment of the inhabitants.

Hebrides, New, islands in the Pacific Ocean, lying between 14.29 and 20.4 S. lat., and 116.41 and 170.21 E. lon. In general, they are high and mountainous, abounding with wood, water, and the usual productions of the tropical islands. The inhabitants are of very different appearances at different islands; but are chiefly of a slender make and dark colour. Their canoes and houses are small, and poorly constructed; and, except their arms, they have scarcely any manufacture.

Helena, St, a lofty island in the Atlantic Ocean, 27 miles in circuit, belonging to Great Britain. It has some mountains, particularly one called Diana Peak, which is covered with wood to the very top. The chief inconvenience to which this island is subject is want of rain; but it is far from being barren: the interior valleys and little hills are covered with verdure, and interspersed with gardens, orchards, and various plantations. There are also many pastures, filled with cattle and sheep; goats, hogs, and poultry are likewise numerous. Rupert Bay, Jamestown, and Lemon Valley, are the landing-places; and they are so strongly defended by nature and art, that it seems impossible to force a descent. To this island Buonaparte was exiled by the allied powers of Europe in 1815; and here he died in 1821. Lat. 15.55 S., lon. 5.43 W. Pop. 7000.

Herat (or Heraut), a city of Afghanistan, and the seat of an independent principality, which adjoins the Persian province of Khorassan. It is encompassed by a lofty mud wall and wet ditch, and has a strong citadel. The staple commodities are silk, saffron, and assafoetida; and it is the emporium of the trade carried on between Caubool, Bokhara, Hindoostan, and Persia. An effort made by Persia, in 1855, 56, to annex Herat to her territory, was defeated by the armed intervention of Britain. Pop. about 50,000.

Hérault, an extensive dep. of France, including the north-east part of the old prov. of Languedoc. The production of wine, silk, honey, and wax are the chief branches of industry; but the pilchard and other fisheries afford employment for many of the inhabitants. Pop. 400,420.

Herculaneum, an ancient city of Naples, totally overwhelmed by an eruption of Mt Vesuvius in the year 79. After a concealment of sixteen centuries, accidentally, in 1713, to the discovery of its ruins. Since that period many excavations have been made, and numerous relics found, which throw great light on the state of the arts and the domestic customs of the Romans.

Herefordshire, a county of England, 40 miles long and 35 broad, is divided into 11 hundreds and 220 parishes, and has one city and seven market-towns. The soil of this county is exceedingly rich, producing excellent corn, hops, and fruit; apples, from which cider in great quantities is made, grow in abundance. The cattle of Herefordshire are deservedly held in high estimation, being excellent workers, remarkably quiet and docile, and fattening easily; but as respects the dairy, they are of little value. The sheep are small, but afford a fine silky wool. The chief rivers are the Wye, Monnow, and Lug. Total pop. 125,370.

Hereford, a city of England, and the cap. of the above county, was repeatedly the seat of hostilities during the wars of the houses of York and Lancaster, but it is a place of no great trade or interest at the present day. It is seated on the Wye, over which is an ancient stone bridge. Its principal manufacture is gloves. Pop. 18,347.

Hertford, a borough, and the capital of Hertfordshire, on the Lea. Here is a public school belonging to Christ's Hospital in London, also a shire-hall, and a large county gaol. About two miles from the town is Hailybury College, established in 1806 by the E. I. Company, for preparing its civil officers for their duty in India. About a mile to the east is a basin of water called Chadwell, which is the head-spring of the New River. Pop. 7169.

Hertfordshire, a county of England, 36 miles in length and 28 in breadth, divided into eight hundreds and 134 parishes, and having 19 market-towns. The north part is hilly, forming a scattered portion of the chalky ridge that extends across the kingdom in this direction; the soil, however, produces excellent wheat and barley. The west part is, in general, a tolerably rich surface, and under capital cultivation. The most noted rivers are the Lea, Stort, and Coln, and the artificial one called the New River. Total pop. 192,226.

Herve, a town of Belgium, prov. Liège. Pop. 3400.

Herzegovina, a country of Turkey in Europe, adjoining Bosnia, and extending south-east to the borders of Albania and Montenegro. Mostar is its chief city.

Hesdin, a town of France, dep. Pas de Calais. Pop. 3200.

Hessen-Cassel, or Electoral Hesse, a member of the former Germanic Confederation, but incorporated within the Prussian dominions in 1866, and now included within the prov. of Hessen-Nassau. It embraced a central territory and several detached portions, the whole lying between lon. 8° and 11° E., and lat. 50° and 53° N. Agriculture is the chief occupation of the inhabitants, but in general only the valleys and the lower portion of the hill slopes are cultivated. Mining is pursued more or less throughout, and considerable quantities of iron, copper, cobalt, and coal are produced; there are manufactories of various kinds of cloth, also hardware, fire-arms, porcelain, musical instruments, &c.; but the great article of export is linen cloth.

Hessen-Darmstadt, or the Grand Duchy of Hesse, a state of Germany, lying between lon. 7° and 10° E., and lat. 49° and 51° N., divided into the provinces of Starkenberg, Upper Hessen, and Rhenish Hessen. It is extremely fertile and well cultivated, producing corn, wine, and fruit in abundance. Mining is next in importance; the manufactures being inconsiderable. Pop. 854,000.

Hessen-Homburg, a small territory in Germany, formerly a sovereign landgraviate, but since 1866 incorporated within the Prussian territory.

Hexham, a town in Northumberland, on the Tyne, with a trade in tanned leather, hats, shoes, and gloves. Pop. 5331.

ty, Ireland, with a manufacture of muslins.

Himalaya or Himaleh (Mountains), a stupendous chain of mountains in Asia, which extends from Caubool along the N. of Hindoostan, and is the general boundary of Thibet, through the whole extent from Caubool to China. The average height of the Himalaya chain is estimated at 15,700 ft, but numerous peaks exceed 25,000 ft in altitude. The highest measured summit is Mt Everest, which is 29,002 ft above the sea. Kunchinjinga is 28,156 ft, and Dhawalagiri 26,826 ft.

Hinckley, a town in Leicestershire; in which is a considerable manufacture of stockings. Pop. 6902.

Hindia, a town and fort of Hindoostan. Lat. 22.28 N., lon. 77.5 E.

Hindon, a borough in Wiltshire. Pop. 604.

Hindoo-Koosh, a mountain-system of Central Asia, adjoining the W. extremity of the Himalaya chain, and traversing the NE. portion of Afghanistan, with the adjoining regions of Turkestan. The snow-covered mountain called Hindoo-Koh, one of its most conspicuous summits, is to the N. of the city of Caubool, and is conjectured to exceed 20,000 ft in height.

Hindoostan (or India proper), a vast region of southern Asia, extending from the Himalaya Mountains southward to Cape Comorin, and comprising, in its wider portion, the countries lying between Assam and Burmah on the east, with Afghanistan and Beloochistan on the west. Its more southward division forms a peninsular region, bounded on two sides by the waters of the Indian Ocean. In all, Hindoostan comprises 1,300,000 sq. miles of territory, with a pop. numbering above 200 millions,—little less than two-thirds that of Europe, and exceeding that of Britain, France, Austria, and Russia, united. The principal rivers are the Ganges, Brahmapootra, Indus, Nerbudda, Taptee, Mahanuddy, Godavery, Kistna, Pennar, and Cauvery. The chief mountains are the Himalaya, Vindhya, and the Ghauts. The great bulk of the inhabitants are Hindoos, and are followers of the Brahminical religion: there are, however, about ten millions of Mohammedans. Though commonly spoken of as one people, the Hindoos really comprise many distinct tribes and nations, amongst whom are diversities of language, custom, and religious observance. In general, the Hindoos are of dark complexion, of slender figure, and of pleasing countenance and manner. They are, socially, divided into numerous castes; the four principal of which are the Brahmins, soldiers, labourers, and mechanics; and these are subdivided into a multiplicity of inferior distinctions. The people of different castes are kept distinct from each other by insurmountable barriers; and they are forbidden to intermarry, to eat, or even to drink out of the same vessel, with one of another caste. The arts in which the Hindoos have made the greatest progress are, agriculture, weaving, dyeing, and architecture, more especially weaving and dyeing. Hindoostan, towards the N., is pretty temperate, but sultry in the S.; and it rains almost constantly for three months in the year. Its products are diamonds, and other precious stones, silks, spices, aromatics, drugs, maize, rice, and sugar; and the chief manufactures are cotton goods, muslins, and calicos. But these and various other particulars will be found under the different names of its provinces, cities, towns, mountains, and rivers, elsewhere described. The political condition of Hindoostan is anomalous. A native population of above 200 millions is held in subjection by a few thousand settlers from a distant island in the Western Ocean. The whole of India, from the Himalaya to Cape Comorin, is virtually subject to the sway of Britain, though in some of its provinces the forms of native government are allowed to remain. British India (as the countries under the direct rule of Britain are termed) is divided into the great provinces of Bengal, the North-West Provinces, Oude, the Punjaub, the Central Provinces, British Burmah, Bombay, and Madras. These together embrace an area of 930,599 sq. m., and a population of above 190 millions. British Burmah, however, lies beyond the limits of Hindoostan or India proper, and comprehends an extensive tract of country on the western side of the Indo-Chinese peninsula. The Native States (which stand in various degrees of relationship to the British power, and to many of which the designation of Protected or Tributary States is applied) include an area of 596,790 sq. m., and a population which is little short of 50 millions. The town and territory of Goa, on the west coast, belong to Portugal, and a few tracts, of insignificant extent, are under the rule of France: with these exceptions, British power is throughout supreme. The prestige of military success which has hitherto served in no small degree to maintain this power, is the more easily intelligible from the fact that the vast mass of the Hindoo population has in all ages been the ready prey of the conqueror. Devoid of self-sustaining energy, the Hindoos have never raised themselves to a foremost place among nations, even of Asiatic blood. It has been under their Mohammedan rulers that their most consolidated display of power has been at different times displayed. The foreign commerce of India, long a monopoly in the hands of the East India Company, was partially opened in 1814, and in 1834 the exclusive restrictions hitherto imposed on it for the advantage of the Company were altogether abrogated. The commercial privileges of the E. I. Company were, in fact, then taken away, and only its political functions allowed to remain. It continued in the administration of these, which involved (with the partial check afforded by the Board of Control) the actual government of the immense territory above described, down to 1857. The widely-spread sepooy insurrection which broke out in that year, and which shook, for a time, the supremacy of British power in the East, rendered a further change necessary, and the expediency of bringing the government of India under the direct control of the Crown became generally admitted. A bill for the purpose of accomplishing this transference of power was accordingly submitted to parliament in 1858.

Hingham, a market-town in Norfolk, 14 m. W. by S. of Norwich. Pop. 1605. — A small sea-port of Massachusetts, U. S., 15 m. SE. of Boston. Pop. 3600.

Hoang-ho, a large river of Asia, also called the Yellow River, with a course estimated at 2000 m. The lower portion of its channel, which had formerly an eastwardly direction, has become changed within a recent period, and it now runs north-eastwardly into the Gulf of Pechelelee.

Hobart-town, a sea-port, and the cap. of Tasmania. It stands on the west bank of the Derwent, at the foot of Mt. Wellington; and was founded in 1804. The chief exports are sheep, wool, flour, potatoes, corned meats, dried fish, hides, tallow, barilla, bark, seal-skins, whale-oil, and spars. Pop. 20,000.

Hochst, a town in Hessen-Nassau, Germany, near Frankfort-on-the-Main.

Hochstadt, a small town of Bavaria, two miles from Blenheim, where the celebrated victory was gained by the Duke of Marlborough; and which is called by the French and Germans the battle of Hochstadt.

Hoddesdon, a market-town in Hertfordshire, four miles from Hertford. Pop. 1898.

Hoei-tcheou, a city of China, of the first rank; famous for tea, varnish, and japaned work. Lat. 29.57 N., lon. 118.5 E.

Hof, a town of Bavaria, with manufactures of muslins, cotton yarn, woollen stuffs, leather, paper, &c. Pop. 16,000.

Hogue, La, a small maritime town of France, dep. La Manche (lat. 49.35 N., lon. 1.17 W.). The naval victory gained by the English in 1692, over a powerful French squadron, derives its name from this place.

Hohenlinden, a village of Bavaria, memorable for one of the most desperate conflicts of the revolutionary war, between a French and Bavarian army under Moreau, and the Austrians under the Archduke John, A.D. 1800.

Hohenlohe, or Holach, once a principality of Franconia, but now only a part of the kingdom of Wurtemberg.

Hohenzollern, a small territory in the SW. of Germany (divided into Hohenzollern-Hechingen and Hohenzollern-Sigmaringen), formerly ranking among the independent states of the Germanic Confederation, but annexed to the Prussian monarchy in 1849.

Ho-kien, a city of China, of the first rank. Lat. 38.40 N., lon. 116.23 E.

Holbeach, a market-town in Lincolnshire. Pop. 5332.

Holbeck, a town in the West Riding of Yorkshire.—Another in Zealand, Denmark, with a good harbour. Lat. 55.42 N., lon. 11.44 E.

Holland, or The Netherlands, a kingdom of Europe, extending 150 miles from north to south, and 100 from west to east. It comprehends ten provinces—North and South Holland, Guelderland, Zealand, Utrecht, Friesland, Overijssel, Drenthe, Groningen, and Dutch Brabant; besides a portion of Limburg and Luxemburg. Among the most valuable natural productions of this country may be reckoned its excellent cattle; and great quantities of madder are exported, chiefly cultivated in Zealand. The principal revenue arises from the herring, cod, and whale fisheries; but these are not so considerable as formerly. The inland trade is greatly facilitated by canals, which pass in every direction, and equal the roads in other countries. This country contains thousands of windmills for sawing timber, grinding corn, &c.; and the number of its manufactures is astonishing. The chief rivers are the Rhine, Meuse, Dommel, Waal, Yssel, Scheld, and Vecht. The Calvinist religion is the most prevalent, but all other sects are tolerated. The Dutch are strongly attached to their government, and few countries possess a population in which the domestic and social duties are discharged with such constancy. A scrupulous economy and cautious foresight seem to be the characteristic virtues of every class; but though they are frugal, they live well and substantially. In 1795 Holland was rapidly overrun by the French; the Stadtholder fled, and it was named the Batavian republic; this form of government continued till 1806, when Napoleon erected it into a kingdom in favour of his brother Louis; but on his abdication in 1810, it was united to France. In 1813, a counter-revolution took place, and the Prince of Orange was proclaimed sovereign under the title of William I. In 1830, the severance of the Belgian provinces from Holland occurred. Pop. (in 1870), 3,688,000. See Belgium.

Holland, the most considerable province of the kingdom of Holland, divided into South and North Holland; which last is also called West Friesland, to distinguish it from Friesland on the east side of the Zuyder Zee. This province is not above 180 miles in circuit; but is so populous, that no country in Europe, of such small extent, can equal it. The land is almost everywhere lower than the sea, and the water is kept out by dikes. The pastures are rich; there is plenty of cattle, butter, and cheese; and the seas and rivers abound with fish. Holland has extensive linen and woollen manufactures, and numerous docks for the building of ships.

—A strong town in Oberland, Prussia.

Holland, New, the name formerly given to the western shores of the Australian continent, originally conferred by its Dutch discoverers, and often applied to the whole extent of Australia.

Hollymount, a small town in Mayo co., Ireland.

Holme, a town in Cumberland (6 m. W. by N. of Wigton), sometimes called Abbey Holme, from an abbey that formerly stood here.

Holmfirth, a manufacturing village in the W. Riding of Yorkshire, a few miles S. of Huddersfield. Pop. 14,000.

Holstein, a duchy of N. Germany, long attached to the crown of Denmark, from which it became separated (along with Schleswig) in 1864. Both Schleswig and Holstein were, two years later, incorporated within the Prussian dominions, forming together the prov. of Schleswig-Holstein. Holstein is celebrated for its excellent cattle and horses: wheat, oats, barley, butter, and cheese are also exported. The chief towns are Gluckstadt, Altona, and Kiel.

Holston, a river of the U.S., which rises in the Alleghany Mountains, in Virginia, and flows SSW. into Tennessee.

Holsworthy, a town in Devonshire. Pop. 1830.

Holt, a market-town in Norfolk, 21 m. NNW. of Norwich. Pop. 1635.—A town in Denbighshire, on the Dee. Pop. 1056.

Holy Cross, a village in the county of Tipperary, Ireland.

Holy Island (or Lindisfarne), an island lying adjacent to the coast of Northumberland, and connected at low water with the mainland. Various fragments of its ancient abbey (celebrated in Anglo-Saxon times) are still extant.

Holyhead, a sea-port of Wales, and the largest town in the county of Anglesea. It is the nearest port of embarkation for Dublin, distant from that city about twenty leagues. Pop. 5916.

Holywell, a town in Flintshire, Wales, remarkable for its activity in mining and manufactures. It takes its name from the famous well of St. Winifred. This is a copious stream, bursting out of the ground with great impetuosity; and is now applied to the purpose of turning several mills for the working of copper, making brass wire, paper, and snuff, and spinning cotton. Pop. 3540.

Homburg, a town in Prussian Germany, nine miles NW. of Frankfort-on-the-Main. Pop. 7000.

Homs. See Hems.

Ho-nan, a large prov. of China, situate almost in the centre of the empire. It contains eight cities of the first class, and 102 of the second and third. Pop. 23,000,000.

Honda, a town of New Granada, on the river Magdalena. Lat. 5.13 N., lon. 74.50 W. Pop. 4500.

Hondschoote, a town in Nord, France.

Honduras, a state of Central America, extending across from the Bay of Honduras to the Pacific, and bounded inland by the states of Guatemala, Salvador, and Nicaragua. Honduras comprises an area of about 43,700 sq. m., with a pop. of 358,000. Its surface is hilly, with watered valleys, rich in the vegetable abundance of tropical regions. The forests comprise cedar, mahogany, and other valuable woods. The mineral wealth of the country is also considerable. Lead and copper, besides the precious metals, are found; but the number of mines now worked is fewer than at a former period. The ma-majority of the population are either Indians or Mestizos. The form of government is republican. Comayagua is the cap. The other chief towns are Truxillo and Omoa, on the Atlantic coast, with Port San Lorenzo (upon the Bay of Conchagua), on the Pacific side.

Honduras (British), an extensive settlement belonging to Great Britain, on the E. coast of Central America. The forests abound with some of the finest timber trees, particularly mahogany and logwood; the former flourishes most in high and exposed situations, while the latter thrives best in a swampy soil. Most of the West India productions succeed well here, but they are little cultivated. The coast was discovered by Columbus in 1502; it was transferred from Spain to England in 1670, but its occupation was contested by the Spaniards at different times, down to 1798, since which it has remained quietly in our possession. Pop. 25,000. The only town in the settlement is Balize, at the mouth of a large river of the same name.

Honfleur, a sea-port in France, dep. Calvados. Lat. 49.24 N., lon. 0.15 E. Pop. 8490.

Hong-kong, an island off the coast of China, forming one of a group situated near the entrance of the Canton river. It was ceded to Britain in 1842, and has since constituted a British settlement. The population, at that time fewer than 5000, now exceeds 120,000. Hong-kong measures 10 m. in length, and comprises about 30 sq. m. in area. Great part of the interior is covered with hills, the loftiest of which reaches 1825 ft above the sea. Water is abundant, the climate (except under particular influences, dependent on the monsoons) not otherwise than healthy, and the heat seldom oppressive even to Europeans. Altogether, Hong-kong constitutes an important station for trade, and is a valuable acquisition to the empire of Britain in the Eastern Seas. The town of Victoria, founded on the N. side of the island, is its capital.

Honiton, a borough in Devonshire, with a manufacture of broad lace, and a good trade in butter. Pop. 2464.

Honolulu, the principal sea-port of the Sandwich Islands, situated on the island of Oahu. It has about 6000 inhab., among whom are several hundred foreigners, chiefly subjects of the United States.

Hoobly, a town of the Deccan, Hindoostan, Bombay pres. Lat. 15.20 N., lon. 75.15 E. Pop. 15,000.

Hooghly, a district of Hindoostan, presid. Bengal. It is a low level tract of great fertility, but on the sea-coast is very unhealthy and densely covered with jungle. The Hooghly river and many other branches and tributaries of the Ganges intersect it.—The cap. of the above district; a large, prosperous, and well-inhabited town, with a college, in which English, Persian, and Arabic are taught. Pop. 12,000.

Hooly Onore, a town of Hindoostan, prov. Mysore, 127 m. NW. of Seringapatam.

Hoorn, a sea-port town of North Holland, with a good harbour, and a large trade in cattle, butter, and cheese; the herring fishery is also considerable. Lat. 52.38 N., lon. 4.50 E. Pop. 8200.

Hope, a river in Sutherlandshire, which flows north, forms a lake of its name, and enters the east side of Loch Eribol.

Horn, a town of Lower Austria.—Another, of Holland, in Dutch Limburg.

Hornsey, a town in the E. Riding of Yorkshire, near which is a mere, two miles long and a mile broad, famous for its pike and eels.—A pleasant village in Middlesex, near London. The New River, which meanders through it, adds greatly to the beauty of the scenery. Pop. 11,746.

Horsham, a borough in Sussex, on the Arun; noted for fine poultry. Pop. 7831.

Horta, the capital of Fayal, one of the Azores. Lat. 38.32 N., lon. 28.41 W.

Hosungabad, a town and district of Brit. India, pres. Bengal, the former situated on the left bank of the Nerbudda river. Lat. 22.44 N., lon. 77.44 E.

Hottentots, a native people of S. Africa, forming the aboriginal population of the Cape Colony. They are now greatly reduced in numbers, and the few that remain within the limits of the Colony no longer exhibit the pure Hottentot blood, but are principally of mixed breed—or Bastards, as they are called by the colonists. The Hottentots are in general as tall as most Europeans, but are more slender; and the characteristic mark of this nation is the smallness of their hands and feet compared with the other parts of their body. Their skin is of a yellowish brown hue; they have high cheek-bones; and the finest set of teeth imaginable. The females as well as the males are clothed with sheep-skins; the wool being worn outward in summer and inward in winter; and they besmear their bodies all over with fat, in which soot is mixed. They are excellent swimmers and divers, and practise bathing several times in the day. Their habitations are merely huts, resembling a round bee-hive, and very low. Another tribe of Hottentots are the Bosjesmans, who inhabit the interior part of the country, and live by hunting and plunder. They are of short stature, and remarkably lean; their eyes are more wild and animated than those of the Hottentots in the vicinity of the Cape; and their whole countenance exhibits strong symptoms of suspicion and apprehension. Their weapons are poisoned arrows, shot from a small bow; and they will hit a wild animal with a tolerable degree of certainty at a distance of 100 paces. To kill it entirely, to cut out the poisoned part, and to begin devouring the prey, are acts that follow each other with the utmost rapidity. Many of these savages go entirely naked, and chiefly reside in bushes, holes made in the ground, or clefts in rocks. To the north of the country of the Bosjesmans, and on the other side of the Orange River, is another tribe, called Koranas, who rank higher than any other of the Hottentot nations. They are more cleanly in their appearance, and neater in their dress and domestic utensils. The Koranas appear to be a mixed breed, between the Hottentot and Caffre; a tribe of the latter are their nearest neighbours, with whom they live on very good terms; but a perpetual warfare subsists between them and the Bosjesmans.

Houat, an island of France, between Belleisle and the continent. It is defended by a fort. Lat. 47.26 N., lon. 3.10 W.

Hounslow, a town of Middlesex, situate on the edge of a heath of the same name, on which are some gunpowder mills. Pop. 9294.

Hou-quang, a former province of China, containing 15 cities of the first class, and 114 of the second and third. It now forms the two distinct provinces of Hoo-nan and Hou-pih, the former with 18,600,000, the latter 37,000,000 inhab.

Hourn, Loch, an arm of the sea on the west coast of Scotland, Inverness-shire.

Houssa, or Haoussa, a kingdom of Central Africa, lying to the W. of Bornou, and limited on the N. by the desert. It contains the two considerable towns of Kashna and Saccatoo.

Howakil, an island in the Red Sea, on the coast of Abyssinia, in the middle of a bay to which it gives name. Lat. 15.8 N., lon. 40.30 E.

Howden, a market-town in the E. Riding of Yorkshire. The bishops of Durham had formerly a palace here, but what remains of it is now occupied as a farmhouse. Pop. 2315.

Howe, Cape, the promontory at the south-east end of New South Wales. Lat. 37.32 S., Lon. 150.2 E.

Howth, a town in Dublin county, Ireland, at the foot of a lofty promontory called the Hill of Howth. Pop. 809.

Hoy, one of the Orkney Islands, between Pomona and the coast of Caithness. Here is a stupendous rock, called the Beary; and on the west coast is a great conic hill, called Hoy Head, which is a sea-mark. Lat. 58.46 N., lon. 3.9 W.

Hoya, a town of Hanover, situated on the left bank of the Weser. Pop. 2130.

Hoyerswerda, a town and castle of Prussian Silesia. Pop. 2170.

Hubert, St, a town of Belgian Luxembourg, with a celebrated abbey. Pop. 1840.

Huddersfield, a market-town in the West Riding of Yorkshire, on the Colne. Huddersfield is one of the principal seats of the woollen manufacture; it is abundantly supplied with coals and water, and enjoys great facility of intercourse with other large towns, by means of canals and railways. It has several good public buildings, among which is a large circular hall, in which narrow and broad cloths, serges, kerseymeres, &c., manufactured in the town and neighbourhood, are weekly exposed to sale. Pop. 70,253.

Hudiksvall, a sea-port of Sweden. Lat. 61.44 N., lon. 17.24 E.

Hudson, a river of the United States, which passes its whole course of 325 miles in the State of New York. The chief towns on it are New York, Albany, Troy, Newbury, Hudson, and Catskill.—A city in Columbia county, New York, the trade of which is considerable. Lat. 42.16 N., lon. 73.58 W.

Hudson Bay, in North America, lying between 51° and 69° N. lat.; discovered in 1610 by Captain Henry Hudson. It communicates with the Atlantic by Hudson Strait, a channel about 500 miles in length, and generally upwards of 100 miles in breadth. Hudson Bay is full of sandbanks, reefs, and islands, and is navigable for only a few months in the year, being at other times frozen over, or obstructed by drift ice. On its west coast are several settlements of the Hudson Bay Company.

Hué-fo, the capital city of the empire of Anam, remarkable for its fortifications, which are in the European style, and, as it is said, upon the model of Strasburg. The city is completely insulated, having the river Hué on two sides of it, and a very spacious canal on the other two. The palace is situated within a strong inner citadel, surrounded by barracks; the arsenal is capacious and well stored, and the public granaries are of enormous extent, and kept full of corn. The neighbourhood of the city is everywhere in a high state of cultivation, with rice, mulberry-trees, cotton, fruit, &c., and thickly interspersed with villages. Pop. 60,000.

Huelva, a town in Andalusia, Spain, the cap. of a prov. of the same name. It lies 50 m. W. by S. of Seville, on the estuary formed at the mouth of the river Tinto. Pop. 7400.

Huesca, a city in Arragon, Spain, and the cap. of a prov. of the same name. Large flocks of sheep graze on the surrounding hills, and the vine is cultivated to a considerable extent; but the industry of the town is confined to tanning and the weaving of coarse linens. Pop. 10,000.

Hull, or Kingston-upon-Hull, a borough and sea-port in the East R. of Yorkshire. It was built by Edward I., and stands on the west side of the river Hull (over which is a modern stone bridge), near its entrance into the Humber. The Greenland whale fishery carried on from this port is by no means so considerable as formerly. Here are two wet docks, with spacious quays, and several dry docks for building and repairing vessels. Among the public buildings are the Trinity House, for the relief of seamen and their widows, an armoury, a naval storehouse, a customhouse, and an exchange. The trade and commerce of Hull are very extensive; and it is deemed the fourth port in the kingdom. The natural facilities for internal communication which it possesses have, indeed, been greatly extended by artificial means: by rivers and canals it is united with Sheffield, Leeds, Manchester, Liverpool, &c.; so that it has become not merely the principal port for the W. R. of Yorkshire, but also for a considerable portion of the trade carried on with the N. of Europe. Pop. 121,892.

Hulst, a strong town in Holland, prov. Zeeland. Pop. 2400.

Humber, a river of England, formed by the junction of the Trent and Ouse. It is a large estuary, between Yorkshire and Lincolnshire, and enters the German Ocean at Spurn Head.

Hundsruok, a range of heights in Western Germany, partly within Rhenish Prussia and partly in the portion of Bavaria lying to the W. of the Rhine. Its highest summit reaches 2263 ft.

Hungary, a large country of Central Europe, formerly a separate kingdom, now an independent portion of the Austro-Hungarian Empire. The crown of Hungary has been attached to the reigning house of Austria since the early part of the 16th century; but the country was allowed to retain its own constitutional privileges. The repeated infractions of these on the part of the Austrian government led to an ill-fated insurrection on the part of the Hungarian nation in 1848-9, which resulted for a time in rivetting more firmly the chains of Austrian despotism. Hungary consists of a large and fertile plain, through which the broad stream of the Danube flows. To the N. and E. this plain is limited by the Carpathian Mountains; on the W. it adjoins the provinces of Lower Austria, Moravia, and Styria. To the S. the course of the Danube, and its tributary, the Save, mark the line of the Turkish frontier. The superficial area of Hungary is 69,504 Eng. square miles, and its population is above 11,000,000. Hungary contains mines of gold, silver, copper, and iron; and there is such abundance of game that hunting is allowed to all. It also produces all the necessaries of life; the wines, especially that called Tokay, are excellent; and tobacco is cultivated in immense quantities. The most noted rivers are the Danube, Save, Drave, Theiss, Maros, Raab, and Waag; the chief manufactures are glass and earthenware, coarse linen, and some fabrics of cotton and wool. The people of Hungary consist of seven distinct races; Magyars, Slovacks, Croatians, Germans, Wallachians, Rusniacks, and Jews.

Hungerford, a market-town in Berkshire, on the Kennet. John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, granted it a charter by the gift of a brass bugle-horn, which is blown annually for the inhabitants to elect the constable, who is the chief officer. Pop. 2309.

Huningue, a fortified town of Alsace-Lorraine, Germany. Pop. 1400.

Hunmanby, a town in E. R. of Yorkshire. Pop. 1387.

Huntingdon, a borough and the capital of Huntingdonshire, seated on a rising ground, on the Ouse. It has a great trade in corn, and was once a large place, with 15 churches, which are now reduced to two. Oliver Cromwell was born here, in 1599. Pop. 4243.

Huntingdonshire, a county of England, 25 miles in length and 20 in breadth, containing 36,800 acres, divided into four hundreds and 106 parishes, and having six market-towns. The south-east part of this county consists of beautiful meadows; the middle and western divisions are fertile in corn, and sprinkled with woods; and the upland part was anciently a forest, peculiarly adapted for hunting. In the north-east quarter are some fens, which join those of Ely; and in the midst of them are several shallow pools, or meres, abounding with fish. The principal rivers are the Ouse and Nen; and the staple commodities corn, malt, and cheese. Total pop. 63,708.

Huntington, a township of New York, U. S., with 7000 inhab.—Also, a town of Pennsylvania.

Ibrahîl, or Brahilow. See Brahilow.

Iceland, a large island to the west of Norway, under the dominion of Denmark; 340 miles long and 180 broad, and comprising an area little short of 40,000 sq. miles. The climate of this island is very severe, and it is mountainous, stony, and barren; but in some places there are excellent pastures. On all parts of the coast the bays and harbours are both numerous and safe; and there are several rivers and fresh-water lakes. The loftiest mountains are called yokuls, and of these, Oraefa is esteemed the highest, being computed at 6409 ft. Mount Hecla, 5095 ft, is a noted volcano; and there are several sulphurous and hot springs, called geysers. The principal one has a basin 51 feet in diameter, and in the centre an orifice 17 feet over, in which the water rises and falls; and from this pipe, in violent eruptions, a column of boiling water is frequently shot up 100 feet perpendicularly, or thrown out diagonally to a great distance. In 1783, one of the most tremendous volcanic eruptions on record, accompanied by violent wind and rain, took place in this island. Three fire-spouts broke out on Mount Skapta, which, after rising to a considerable height in the air, formed a torrent of red-hot lava, that flowed for six weeks, and ran a distance of 60 miles to the sea, in a broken breadth of about 12 miles; by which 12 rivers were dried up, 21 villages totally overwhelmed by fire or water, and 34 very materially injured. Of the inhabitants 220 perished by fire, and 21 by water; numberless cattle were also destroyed, and the fish driven from the coasts. The Icelanders are rather tall, of a frank, open countenance, a florid complexion, and yellow flaxen hair; the women are shorter in proportion, and more inclined to corpulency. Their predominant characteristics are unsuspecting frankness, pious contentment, and a steady liveliness of temperament, combined with a strength of intellect, rarely to be met with in other parts. The chief exports are dried fish, mutton, beef, butter, tallow, train oil, coarse woollen cloth, stockings, gloves, wool, sheep and fox-skins, eider-down, and feathers; the imports, timber, fishing-tackle, implements of iron, tobacco, bread, spirits, wine, salt, linen, and other necessities of life. Pop. about 60,000.

Icolmkill, or Iona, a small island of Scotland, one of the Hebrides, near the southwest point of the Isle of Mull. This island was the retreat of learning during the Gothic ignorance which pervaded Europe, after the overthrow of the Roman empire. It contains the remains of several monastic and Druidical edifices, and produces beautiful white marble.

Ida, a lofty and pointed mountain, 7801 feet high, in the island of Candia; famous in ancient times as being the place on which Jupiter was brought up, and where dulating prairies, or rich plains, called by the settlers "barrens;" but it is, nevertheless, supposed to contain a larger proportion of first-rate cultivable land than any other state in the Union. All the grains, roots, and fruits of temperate regions grow luxuriantly; and in none of the W. states is corn raised with greater facility and in more abundance. Many large and flourishing settlements have been formed in its western part since the introduction of steam navigation on the Mississippi. Grain, cattle, butter, cheese, and other agricultural products form the chief articles of export; and sugar, tea, coffee, wines, and manufactured goods are the chief imports. Among its minerals are iron, copper, and coal, and salt springs are numerous. Pop. 2,539,000. A river in the above state, which has a southerly course, and joins the Mississippi.

Illyria (Kingdom of), a portion of the Austrian empire, comprising the provinces of Carinthia, Carniola, and Istria. Its N. part is covered by the central chain of the Alps, and is, in general, far from fertile; but the S. part differs both in its productions and cultivation; the fields being covered with rows of mulberries, or with elms and poplars, around which the vines cluster; the whole bearing an aspect equal to central Italy. The principal wild animals of the northern districts are the chamois, red-deer, and roebuck: in the southern provinces ortolans, partridges, quails, &c. are common; but the chief wealth of Illyria consists in its mines of iron, lead, quicksilver, and coal. Pop. 1,465,000.

Ilmen, a lake in Novgorod, Russia, 40 m. long and 18 broad.

Ilmenau, a town of Germany, grand-duchy of Saxe-Weimar, and in the heart of the Thuringian Forest. It is much frequented as a summer residence. Pop. 2360.

Indiana, one of the United States of America, 240 miles in length and 150 in breadth, divided into 91 counties. It borders on the S. shore of Lake Michigan. The chief productions of this country are wheat, maize, rye, flax, hemp, potatoes, and tobacco. Extensive tracts are still covered with forest. Both iron and coal are abundant, and there are numerous salt-springs. The principal rivers are the Ohio, Wabash, and White River. Pop. 1,655,000. Indianapolis, its cap., has 48,000.

Indians, the name by which the original natives of America are generally called. A concise detail of the manners, customs, &c. of the different tribes, will be found under the heads of the countries they inhabit.

Indies, East, the name given by Europeans to a vast tract of country belonging to southern and south-eastern Asia, from the borders of Afghanistan and the shore of the Arabian Sea eastward to China; as well as to a great number of islands in the Indian Ocean, extending from Southern Hindoostan as far east as New Guinea, and from the Bay of Bengal and the China Sea as far south as the shores of Australia. The most western of the islands are the Maldives, and the most eastern the Moluccas; between which are several very large ones, as Ceylon, Sumatra, Java, Borneo, and Celebes; besides many others of considerable importance in wealth of natural produce, though inferior in extent.

Indies, West. The numerous islands which come under this term lie between lon. 60° and 85° W., and lat. 10° and 27° N., comprising the larger and smaller Antilles; the former consisting of Cuba, Hayti, Jamaica, and Porto Rico; and the latter, of the Virgin, Leeward, and Windward groups, with the Bahamas, Trinidad, Tobago, and a few other islands. Of these, Cuba and Porto Rico belong to Spain; Hayti is independent; Jamaica, the Bahamas, Trinidad, Barbadoes, Antigua, Dominica, Grenada, St Lucia, &c. belong to Great Britain; Guadaloupe, Martinique, Marie Galante, &c. to France; St Eustatius, Saba, and Curaçoa, to the Dutch; St Croix, St Thomas, and St John to the Danes; and St Bartholomew to the Swedes. They were formerly likewise called the Caribbee Islands, from the aborigines of the country; and the sea in which they lie is named the Caribbean Sea. The name of Caribbee should, however, be confined to the smaller islands, lying in a semicircle between Porto Rico and Trinidad. These were inhabited by the Caribs, a fierce race of Indians, in no wise resembling their timid neighbours in the larger islands.

Indigirka, a river of Siberia, which flows with a N. course into the Arctic Ocean, nearly under the meridian of 150 E. of Greenwich.

Indore, a city and territory of Hindoostan, the latter forming a native state ruled by the successor of the house of Holkar, and dependent on the Bengal Presidency. The territory extends across the river Nerbudda and the chain of the Vindhya Mountains, including part of the tableland of Malwa. It includes an area of 15,680 sq. m., with 1,415,000 inhab. The city of Indore stands on a plain to the N. of the Vindhya Mountains (350 m. SSW. of Agra), and has 15,000 inhab.

Inverkeithing, a borough and sea-port in Fifeshire, Scotland; which has a commodious harbour, with excellent quays, and a good trade in coal and salt. Lat. 55.57 N., lon. 3.12 W. Pop. 1755.

Inverleithen (or Innerleithen), a town in Peebleshire, Scotland. Here is an extensive woollen-manufacture, and a famous sulphurous spring. Pop. 1130.

Inverness-shire, the most extensive county of Scotland. It includes several of the Hebrides; and, independent of them, is 80 m. in length and 50 in breadth. This county is divided into two equal parts by the Caledonian Canal; and has several considerable lakes, particularly those of Ness, Oich, Lochie, and Linnhe. The extensive plains which surround the lakes are, in general, fertile; the high grounds feed many sheep and beeves, and numerous herds of goats are found in every district. Ben Nevis, the highest mountain in Great Britain, 4370 feet above the level of the sea, is situated in Lochaber, near Fort William. The mountains and forests contain immense numbers of red and roe deer; the alpine and common hare, and other game, are also abundant. Limestone, iron-ore, and some traces of different minerals, have been found in this county, with beautiful rock crystals of various tints. The most noted rivers are the Spey, Ness, and Beauley. Total pop. 87,480. —The borough of Inverness is the capital; it is situate on both sides of the Ness, and has a commodious harbour for vessels of 200 tons. Here is a good salmon fishery, a large manufacture of ropes and canvass, several tan-works, and a considerable trade. Pop. 14,463.

Inverury, a borough in Aberdeenshire, Scotland. Pop. 2856.

Iowa, one of the United States of N. America, admitted into the Union in 1846. It embraces a fine tract of country situated between the Mississippi and Missouri rivers, chiefly consisting, in its natural state, of alternate woodland and prairie. Iowa possesses lead mines of great value, together with zinc, iron, and other mineral wealth. Tobacco is grown to some extent, and hogs are largely reared. Area, 50,914 sq. m.; pop. 1,191,000. The cap. of the state is Iowa City, situated on the river Iowa, which joins the Mississippi.

Ipswich, a borough and the principal town of Suffolk, on the Orwell; in which are twelve parish churches, a guildhall, and a custom-house, with a good quay. Ipswich has a considerable coasting-trade, and much corn and malt are sent hence to London, and timber to the different dockyards. It was the birth-place of Cardinal Wolsey. Pop. 42,947.—A town of Massachusetts, in Essex county. Lat. 42.39 N., lon. 70.50 W.

Irak, or Irak Ajemi, a province of Persia. It includes the greater part of the ancient Media, and is a large mountainous country, with valleys that seldom exceed 12 m. in breadth. Irak contains Teheraun and Ispahaun, the two modern capitals of Persia.

Irak, or Irak Arabi, a province of Turkey in Asia. This country is the ancient Chaldaea; it is watered by the Euphrates and Tigris, which in many parts form extensive marshes. It is thinly inhabited, but possesses a soil capable of being made highly productive, as in past ages.

Ireby, a market-town in Cumberland, with only 465 inhab.

Ireland, an island of Europe, lying to the west of Great Britain. It is 280 m. in length and 160 in breadth; containing about 19,436,000 acres, divided into four provinces—Ulster, Leinster, Munster, and Connaught; and these are subdivided into 32 counties. The climate of Ireland is mild and temperate, but more humid than in England. In general, it is a level country, well watered with lakes and rivers; and the soil in most parts is very good and fertile. It produces corn, potatoes, hemp, and flax, in great plenty; and cattle, hogs, beef, and butter are exported in very considerable quantities. Ireland is, in fact, much better adapted for a grazing than for an agricultural country; and such, in this respect, is the excellence of the soil, that in most parts it never fails, when laid down to grass, to clothe itself with a rich and luxuriant cover of herbage. The other commodities are hides, wool, tallow, wood, salt, honey, and wax. There are also quarries of marble and fine slate, and mines of coal, iron, copper, lead, and silver. Every habitable part of the island abounds in the ruins of castles, churches, and religious houses; and of many others which once existed the site is now unknown. The principal manufacture is fine linen cloth, which is brought to great perfection; and the trade in it is very considerable. This country is well situated for foreign commerce, on account of its many secure and commodious bays and harbours. The coasts teem with fish. The lakes, more usually called Loughs, are numerous; the most noted are those of Erne, Mask, Corrib, Neagh, Killarney, Rec, Derg, and Allen; the chief rivers are the Shannon, Foyle, Liffey, Boyne, Suir, Barrow, Blackwater, and Lee. Whether attributable to the soil or climate, or both, it is certain that in Ireland there are no moles, toads, or serpents. The laws differ but little from those of England, and the established religion is the same; but the majority of the people are Roman Catholics, and retain their nominal hierarchy. Formerly Ireland enjoyed a distinct Parliament, which was subordinate to that of Great Britain; but, in 1800, it was deemed expedient that its legislature should be united to that of England. The two Parliaments passed acts for that purpose; and the two kingdoms, in 1801, were styled the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. The government is administered by a Lord Lieutenant, who is appointed by the sovereign. During the period between 1841 and '51, the pop. of Ireland underwent a remarkable diminution. In the former year, it had 8,175,238 inhabitants: in the latter, only 6,550,319, a decrease in the ratio of nearly 20 per cent. This result is accounted for by the famine which occurred in the years 1846-8, combined with the continuous stream of emigration directed across the Atlantic. Within recent years, the social condition of Ireland has undergone considerable improvement, and its varied industrial resources are in fuller process of development than was previously the case. Pop. (in 1871) 5,402,759.

Italy, one of the most fertile and celebrated countries of Europe, 670 miles in length, and 350 in breadth. Down to a recent date, Italy was politically divided into several distinct states, and had no recognised place in the family of European nations. The revolutionary movements of 1859-60 resulted in the establishment of the present Kingdom of Italy, at the head of which is the former royal house of Sardinia. By the acquisition of Venice in 1866, and of Rome in 1871, the unification of Italy, under one sovereign, is complete.

Though for the most part mountainous Italy has some plains, of which the most extensive and richest is that of Lombardy. The principal rivers are the Po, Tiber, Arno, and Adige; and there are several fine lakes, as the Maggiore, Lugano, Como, Garda, Perugia, Bracciano, and Celano. Italy produces a great variety of wines, and the best oil in Europe: excellent silk in abundance; corn of all sorts; and all kinds of fruits. It also yields good pasture, and abounds with cattle, sheep, goats, buffalos, wild boars, mules, and horses. The forests are well stocked with game; and the mountains afford iron, lead, alum, sulphur, marble, alabaster, jasper, porphyry, &c. No country has produced better politicians, historians, poets, musicians, painters, and sculptors, alike in modern and in ancient times. The Italians are generally well proportioned, and are affable, courteous, ingenious, sober, and ready-witted; but extremely jealous, vindictive, and often superstitious. The women are majestic in figure, possessed of the most lively sensibility, voluptuous, earnest, and enthusiastic; with black hair, black sparkling eyes, and dark olive complexions. Masquerades, gaming, and conversazioni, are among the diversions of the Italians. The established religion is the Roman Catholic, but all sects are tolerated. The Italian language, a corruption of the Latin, is remarkable for its smoothness, and is spoken in its greatest purity within Tuscany. Florence was for a time the cap. of the kingdom, but Rome became the seat of government in 1871. Pop. 26,717,000.

Jamaica, the largest and most valuable of the West Indian islands belonging to Great Britain, was discovered by Columbus in 1494. It lies 30 leagues west of Hayti, and is of an oval form, 170 miles long and 60 broad, divided into three counties, Middlesex, Surrey, and Cornwall, and comprises an area of 4300 sq. miles. The mountains are covered with many kinds of trees; and in the valleys are sugar-canes, and such a variety of fruit-trees, as to give the country a most fertile and pleasing aspect. But there are alligators in the rivers, guanoes and galliwaspas in the fens and marshes, and snakes and noxious animals in the mountains. The year is divided into two seasons, the wet and the dry; the months of July, August, and September are called the hurricane months; and there is lightning almost every night. The general produce of this island is sugar, rum, molasses, ginger, cotton, indigo, pimento, cocoa, coffee, several kinds of woods, and medicinal drugs, but the exports have greatly diminished in amount since the emancipation of the negroes. Maize, guinea corn, and rice are the principal grains cultivated; the plaintain, banana, yam, cassava, and sweet potato are indigenous; and few countries offer so fine an assortment of tropical fruits. The European pop. consists chiefly of English, Scotch, and Irish settlers; the coloured races are divided, according to their share of negro blood, into sambos, mulattos, quadroons, and mestizos. Total pop. 506,000. —A town of New York, chief of Queen county.

Jamba, the cap. of a small kingdom on the east coast of Sumatra.

Japan, an insular empire of the most eastern part of Asia, separated from Corea and China by the Strait of Corea and the Sea of Japan. It consists of the large island of Nippon (upwards of 800 miles in length), and the smaller islands of Sikokf and Kiusiu; together with the island of Jesso, situated to the northward of Japan proper. The mineral wealth of Japan is very great. There are valuable mines both of gold and silver; and fine copper is the main source of the wealth of many provinces. Rice is the principal grain cultivated; ginger, black pepper, sugar, cotton, and indigo are raised in great quantities; and the tea-shrub grows wild in the hedges. The rocks and most barren places produce a variety of fruits, plants, and roots; the woods, forests, and mountains afford good pasturage, and are stocked with deer, oxen, buffalos, hogs, and horses. Here are also large quantities of fine porcelain, silk, and skins, and red pearls, which are not in less repute than the white. The Japanese are of a yellowish complexion, and their hair is black, thick, and shining, from the use they make of oils. Their food consists almost entirely of fish, fowl, eggs, and vegetables; tea is extensively used. They treat the women with great severity, and punish adultery with death. Their language is so peculiar, that it is understood by no other nation. The sciences are highly esteemed among them, and they have several schools, in which are taught arithmetic, rhetoric, poetry, history, and astronomy. The Japanese carry on some trade with China, but manifest an extreme aversion to intercourse with strangers in general. The only European people allowed, until a recent date, to carry on commercial intercourse, were the Dutch. Since 1854, however (and owing in the first instance to the active interference of the United States), relations of commerce have been established with various nations, and several ports are now open to foreign trade. Amongst these are Yokohama (near Jedo), Hiogo, Nagasaki, Hakodadi, and others. The population of Japan is supposed, on good grounds, to be not less than 25 millions.

Japara, a town and fort of Java, situated on the N. coast, 36 m. NNE. of Samarang. It is the cap. of a prov. of the same name.

Java, an island of the East Indies, lying to the S. of Borneo, and separated from Sumatra by the Strait of Sunda. In the interior, through its whole length, is an uninterrupted range of mountains, varying in their elevation above the sea from 5000 to 11,000 feet. The air, except towards the west end of the island, is as temperate and healthy as in any part of the East Indies. Java has numerous rivers, of which the Solo and the Kediri are the chief. It produces abundance of rice, maize, sugar, coffee, cotton, indigo, salt, and tobacco. The Javanese are of a brown complexion, with black hair; they live in mean huts of bamboo, and their food consists principally of rice and vegetables. The island is under the dominion of the Dutch; and, besides the native Javanese, is inhabited by Chinese, Bugese, and other eastern Mohammedans. The pop. is upwards of 13,000,000. Batavia is the seat of government.

Jericho, once a famous city of Palestine, now represented by some ruins near the village of Riecha, not far distant from the head of the Dead Sea. Among its ruins are a few wretched huts, in which some poor Arabs reside.

Jersey, an island in the English Channel, 18 miles from the coast of Normandy, in France, and 84 south from Portland, in Dorsetshire. It is subject to the English, but still governed by the ancient Norman laws: and it is difficult of access, on account of the rocks, sands, and forts erected for its defence. It produces excellent butter and honey; and the south part is nearly covered with apple trees, from the fruit of which great quantities of cider are made. The oyster, cod, conger-eel, and herring-fisheries afford employment to a great number of the inhabitants; and its commercial relations, formerly confined to England and France, now extend to the chief countries of Europe, the W. Indies, and S. America. The manufacturing industry of the island is almost confined to ship-building, shoe-making, and hosiery. Pop. 57,000. The chief town is St Helier.

Jersey, New, one of the United States of America, divided into 13 counties; two of which are mountainous, and three of the others sandy and barren. The chief rivers are the Hackinsac, Passiac, and Rariton. Total pop. 903,000; of Jersey City, 82,500.

Jerusalem, a famous city of Palestine, with the name of which are associated subjects of profound interest for every reflecting mind. It has steep ascents on every side except the north; and presents, at first view, an imposing assemblage of domes, towers, palaces, churches, and monasteries. The brook Kedron flows in the valley on its east side, along the foot of Mount Olivet. The church of the Holy Sepulchre, which monkish tradition claims as including the site of Calvary and the tomb of our Lord, is a large edifice, situated nearly in the centre of the city. The mosque of Omar occupies the site of the temple of Solomon, and is the most splendid pile of architecture in the Turkish empire. The chief manufactures of Jerusalem are beads, rosaries, amulets, crosses, shells, &c.; which are sold by the Jews and Armenians. Numerous were the changes that Jerusalem underwent from the time of its destruction by the Romans, A.D. 70, until it finally came into the hands of Selim in 1519, since which the Turkish flag has always floated over its sacred places. "For more than three centuries its fortunes have been stationary: crowds of pilgrims fill its streets at one season of the year, creating a temporary activity, and increasing the revenues of the Turkish officers; but at all other times its condition recalls forcibly the complaint of Jeremiah:—'The city sits solitary that was full of people: she is become as a widow: she that was great among the provinces has become tributary. Her gates are desolate; all her beauty is departed.'" Pop. 11,500.

Jesi (or Iesi), a town of the Papal States, 14 m. WSW. of Ancona. Pop. 14,000.

Jesso, a large island of Asia, lying between those of Nippon and the Kuriles. It is subject to Japan, and is full of mountains and woods. The shores swarm with Kent, a maritime county in the SE. part of England, 58 miles in length and 36 in breadth; it contains 983,680 acres, divided into five lathes, which are subdivided into 62 hundreds and 405 parishes, having two cities and 28 market-towns. In the soil and face of the country there is a great diversity. The banks of the Thames are low and marshy, but backed by a range of chalky eminences. This kind of hard chalky soil extends to the north-east extremity of the county, and thence round to Dover, exhibiting its nature in the lofty white cliffs which here bound the island, and produce that striking appearance at sea which gave it the name of Albion. The south part of Kent, called the Weald, is a flat and woody tract, of a clayey soil, and fertile. The midland and western districts are a mixture of pleasant hill and dale, arable and pasture. This county produces large quantities of hops, cherries, apples, madder, and birch twigs for brooms. The country inland from Dover, consisting chiefly of open downs, is excellent for the feeding of sheep; and many are fattened to an extraordinary size in Romney Marsh. Paper of every description is manufactured in this county, and there are several gunpowder-mills. Property is much divided in this county, and there are no very large estates. All lands in Kent, unless especially exempted by an act of the legislature, are held by the tenure of gavelkind; descending, in the event of the father dying intestate, to all the sons alike in equal portions; and if there be no sons, they divide equally among the daughters. The principal rivers are the Thames, Medway, Darent, Stour, Cray, and Rother. Total pop. 843,294.

Kentucky, one of the United States of America, 380 miles long, and from 40 to 150 broad, divided into 67 counties. The soil is very fertile in the central parts; to the east and west it is mountainous, and the south-west is called the Barrens, though it is not a sterile country. Tobacco, hemp, cotton, maize, and wheat are cultivated; and the country, in general, is well timbered, producing large trees of many kinds. The mountainous parts yield a great quantity of ginseng; iron ore and lead are found in abundance; and much nitre is procured in caves. The superiority of the Kentucky horses is universally acknowledged throughout the Union, and the mules are also large and excellent. Cattle, wheat, hemp, and tobacco are the principal articles of export. The chief rivers are the Mississippi, Ohio, Kentucky, Licking, Green, and Cumberland. Pop. 1,321,000.—A river of this State, which rises in the Laurel Mountains, and, after a general north-west course of 200 miles, enters the Ohio in lat. 38.20 N. Koriaks, a people of Siberia, divided into two classes. Those properly called Koriaks have a fixed residence; the other are wanderers, and are known by the appellation of Reindeer Koriaks. Their flocks of deer are numerous, which they conduct to those cantons that abound with moss; and when these pastures are exhausted, they seek for others. In this manner they wander about, encamping under tents of skin, and supporting themselves with the produce of their deer. The manners of the fixed Koriaks are a mixture of duplicity, mistrust, and avarice. Their regular occupation is hunting and fishing; and they live upon dried fish, and the flesh and fat of the sea-wolf and whale. When a Koriak dies, his relations and neighbours erect a funeral pile, upon which they place a portion of his wealth, and a stock of provisions, consisting of whatever they conceive he will want for his great journey, and to keep him from starving in the other world. The Koriaks acknowledge a Supreme Being, the creator of all things.

Lancashire, or Lancaster, a county of England; its greatest length (including Furness) is 74 miles, and its breadth 44; containing 1,171,840 acres, divided into six hundreds and 69 parishes, and having 27 market-towns. Its most northerly portion, called Furness, divided from the rest of the county by the estuary of Morecambe Bay, is a wild and rugged region, stored with quantities of iron ore and slate. The east part, between the Ribble and the Mersey, is mountainous, and generally barren; and the southern part is flat, from the sea to the commencement of the ridge called Blackstone Edge, which separates the county from Yorkshire. In the north-east are some lofty hills, the most noted of which is Pendle Hill; the remaining part is varied with hill, dale, and moor. The southern part of the county contains a rich coal-field, and is thickly studded with populous towns and villages. As a commercial and manufacturing county, Lancashire is superior to any other in the kingdom. It is the grand seat of the cotton manufacture, which has grown up with a rapidity wholly unexampled, and given an importance to many of its towns which they could scarcely have attained from any other cause. But, besides that of cotton, the woollen manufacture is extensively carried on at Rochdale and other places in this county, as is that of silk, flax, paper, hats, &c.; while canals and railways traverse the county in every direction, and bring it into speedy communication with almost every other part of the empire. The principal rivers are the Mersey, Irwell, Ribble, Loyne or Lune, Wyre, Hodder, Roche, and Duddon; and it has two extensive lakes, called Winander Mere and Coniston Mere. Total pop. 2,819,495.

Lancaster, a borough, and the capital of Lancashire, seated on the Lune, which forms a port for vessels of moderate burden, and over which are two stone bridges. Lapland, a country of northern Europe, belonging partly to Russia and partly to Sweden and Norway. Swedish Lapland occupies the southern quarter of this country, and is divided into four lapmarks, or provinces: Russian Lapland forms the eastern part, and is included in the government of Archangel: Norwegian Lapland forms the province of Finmark, and embraces the most northern portion of the European continent. The Lapland-ers are low in stature, stout, and of a yellowish complexion; they are peaceable, obedient to their superiors, cheerful in company, and possessed of many domestic virtues. The men are divided into fishers and mountaineers; and their chief traffic is with the Norwegians, with whom they exchange skins and furs, for flour, cloth, and hardware goods. All the Swedish and Norwegian, as well as the greater part of the Russian Laplanders, bear the name of Christians; but their religion is a compound of Christian and Pagan ceremonies. Towards the north, the sun remains for many weeks below the horizon in winter, and in summer is as long without setting; during the former season, however, the darkness is relieved by the brightness of the moon and stars, and the vivid coruscations of the aurora borealis. The reindeer serves the Laplanders as their principal beast of burden; its milk is highly valued: its flesh supplies them with food; its sinews are made into thread, and its horns into many kinds of domestic utensils; and its skin furnishes a great part of their dress.

Limoges, a trading city of France, cap. of the dep. of Haute Vienne. It has numerous manufactures, and its brandy and liqueurs are in high repute. Being situated at the junction of several great roads, it is an entrepôt for the trade of several depts. Pop. 53,000.

Limousin, an old province of France, now included in the depts. of Haute Vienne, Correze, Creuse, and Dordogne.

Limoux, a town of France, dep. Aude: it is generally well built, has considerable manufactures, and is an entrepôt for iron goods, in which, and in wines, oil, soap, and leather, it has an active trade. The environs are highly picturesque and fertile. Pop. 7300.

Linares, a mining town of Spain, in Andalusia, 21 m. NE. of Jaen. Pop. 6700.

Lincoln, a city and the capital of Lincolnshire. It is seated on the top and side of a steep hill, and on the river Witham. The cathedral stands on the brow of a hill, and is admired for its rich and light architecture. The ruins of the castle are venerable pieces of antiquity; and the remains of former religious houses are numerous. Newport Gate, on the north side of the city, is one of the noblest remnants of Roman architecture left in Britain. The chief trade is in coal, brought by the Trent and Fossdyke canal; and oats and wool, which are sent by the Witham. Pop. 26,766.—A town in Mercer co., Kentucky, U. States.

Lincolnshire, a county of England, 77 miles long and 45 broad, containing 1,758,720 acres, divided into 30 hundreds and 630 parishes, having one city and 31 market-towns. The coast is flat, and, at low water, may be seen the submarine relics of a forest, which is a great natural curiosity. The principal rivers are the Humber, Trent, Witham, Welland, and Ancholme. This county is divided into three districts, called Holland, Kesteven, and Lindsey. The first consists of fens and marshes; some in a state of nature, and others cut by drains and canals. The fens, in their native state, produce vast quantities of reeds, which are annually harvested for thatch; the drained parts form excellent pasture land, and some even yield large crops of corn. Prodigious quantities of geese are bred in this district; and here are many decoys for wild ducks, teals, widgeon, and other fowls of the duck kind. Kesteven includes part of the fens; but the air is more salubrious than the district of Holland, and the soil more fruitful. Lindsey, the largest district and most elevated part, includes all the county that lies north of Lincoln, and the Fossdyke, which Henry I. cut between the Witham and the Trent. To the north-east is a large tract of heathy land, called the Wolds, in which great flocks of sheep are bred. The cattle of this county, and the horses and sheep, are all of the largest breed. Total pop. 436,599.

Lipari Islands, a cluster of islands in the Mediterranean, which lie to the north of Sicily. They are all of volcanic origin, were feigned to be the residence of Æolus and Vulcan, and formerly called Æolian Islands. The climate is highly salubrious, and the air pure and refreshing; storms and earthquakes are, however, frequent. Exclusive of corn and cotton, they produce great quantities of fruit, especially grapes, with figs, prickly pears, olives, &c. Some wine is made, called Malvasia, which is much admired at Naples; but most of the grapes are converted into raisins. — Lipari, the cap. town of the above group of islands, situated on the E. side of Lipari, the principal isle. Lipari is the great magazine whence Europe is supplied with pumice-stone, its surface being almost wholly composed of that singular substance. Pop. 12,500.

Liria, a considerable town of Spain, in Valencia, with manufactures of linen, soap, &c., and noted for fine white marble. Pop. 8500.

Lisbon, the capital of Portugal, seated on the north side of the Tagus. The city is open on all sides; and the only military defence is a small castle on the highest ground, in the centre, and some batteries on the banks of the river. The harbour is one of the finest in the world, and will contain 1000 ships in the greatest safety; the entrance is defended by two forts; and before the entrance to the city is the fort of Belem. Near this is a magnificent aqueduct, 2400 feet in length, which conveys water across a deep valley to a great reservoir at one of the extremities of Lisbon. This city was almost destroyed by an earthquake in 1755; but the ruined part has been handsomely rebuilt. It contains many beautiful edifices, including numerous churches and convents; also, several scientific academies, two theatres, and a circus for the bull-fights. The trade is very considerable, this city being the emporium of all goods brought from Brazil, and the colonies belonging to Portugal. Pop. 250,000.

the cave of Trophonius, the last oracle that was heard to utter the decrees of fate. Livadia was burned by the Turks in 1821, and subsequently destroyed in part by the Greeks in an attack upon the Turkish garrison, but it has recovered much of its former prosperity.

Liverpool, a borough and sea-port of England, seated on the river Mersey, and in the county of Lancashire. In the amount of its foreign trade Liverpool ranks first among the sea-ports of Britain, and a magnificent line of docks, along the banks of the Mersey, furnishes accommodation to its shipping. The trade of Liverpool is general; but the principal branch is the American and West Indian trade. The African, Baltic, and Portugal commerce is also very great, as well as that of Ireland; many ships are sent to the East Indies, and the coasting trade employs a number of vessels. By inland navigation, Liverpool has communication with the rivers Dee, Ribble, Ouse, Trent, Humber, Severn, and Thames. Its facility of intercourse with Manchester, &c. by railway is also of the highest importance. The principal manufactures are fine porcelain, earthenware, watches, and stockings; glass, iron, soap, salt, sugar, and copperas works, &c. Besides quintupling its population during the first half of the present century, Liverpool has been more improved, during that period, than any other town in England, and now possesses numerous public buildings worthy of its opulence and commercial importance. Pop. 493,405.—A sea-port of Brit. N. America, prov. Nova Scotia, 65 m. SW. of Halifax.—A town of New South Wales, Australia, 20 m. W. by S. of Sydney.

Livonia, a government of European Russia, so fertile in corn that it is called the granary of the north. In the forests, which supply an abundance of excellent timber, are wolves, bears, elks, reindeer, stags, and hares; and domestic animals are also numerous. There are sugar refineries, and tobacco, woollen cloth, cotton, linen, glass, and other factories; but rural industry, and the distillation of spirits, are by far the most important occupations. The principal articles of export are flax, hemp, honey, wax, leather, skins, and potash. Pop. 821,500.

London, the metropolis of the British empire, and the most important commercial city in the world. London is situated within the valley of the Thames, and chiefly within the county of Middlesex: a large portion of it, however, lies to the south of the river, within Surrey, and the suburban districts extend in part into the adjoining counties of Kent and Essex. The city of London, properly so called, is wholly on the north (or Middlesex) side of the river; as also are the city of Westminster, and the metropolitan boroughs of Marylebone, Finsbury, and the Tower Hamlets. The boroughs of Southwark and Lambeth are to the S. of the Thames, and within Surrey. Including its suburban districts, as now comprised within the Returns of the registrar-general, London comprehends an area of 115 sq. m., within which were included (in 1871) the enormous population of 3,266,987. The more densely inhabited portions of the metropolis, however, are comprised within a smaller space, of nearly 8 m. in the direction of east and west, and measuring between 5 and 6 m. from north to south. Within this area, the streets, squares, warehouses, and various buildings, occur in continuous succession. Seven bridges, which cross the Thames, connect the northern and southern portions of the British metropolis. The lowest of these, London Bridge, marks the inland limit of the port of London, which embraces the river thence downward to Blackwall, a distance of between 6 and 7 miles. Upon either side of the river are commodious docks for the reception of shipping; the more extensive and important being on the N. or Middlesex side. The "West End" of London constitutes its fashionable quarter, as the "City" (properly so called) is the chief seat of its mercantile transactions, while the eastern portions of the metropolis are chiefly occupied by a population engaged in, or connected with, its shipping and sea-faring pursuits. To attempt any enumeration of the chief public buildings of London would be out of place here; and, indeed, its prominent characteristic is to be found, not so much in particular examples of architectural display, as in the general diffusion of wealth and industry over so large a space. Besides its immense seaward commerce, reaching to every quarter of the globe, and the vast internal traffic of which it is the seat, London is also a great manufacturing city. The silk and watch-making trades may be mentioned as prominent examples of this. To describe, however, the trades and manufactures that are carried on in London, would be to enumerate all that other places in the kingdom are separately noted for, and would include nearly every article of utility or luxury; for such are the facilities which the metropolis affords for the performance of all operations on an extensive scale, and such is the spirit of competition that exists among its industrious and enterprising inhabitants, that whatever speculation in art, manufactures, or commerce, holds out a fair promise for the advantageous employment of capital or talent, is sure to be embarked in and prosecuted with the most unremitting energy. The City of London is divided into 26 wards, each governed by an alderman; and from the aldermen the Lord Mayor is annually chosen. There are likewise 236 common-councilmen, a recorder, a common-sergeant, two sheriffs (who are also sheriffs of Middlesex), a chamberlain, a town-clerk, a remembrancer, a water-bailiff, and many inferior officers. The W. end of the town is beautified and rendered healthy by four extensive parks, all affording ample scope for healthy amusement and exercise to those resident in their vicinity: viz. Hyde Park, lying W. of the roads leading from Piccadilly and Oxford Street, with Kensington Gardens adjoining its W. boundary; St James's Park, extending from Whitehall to Buckingham Palace, with the Green Park attached, on the S. side of Piccadilly; and the Regent's Park, situated to the N. of Portland Place, beautifully laid out, and surrounded by splendid buildings, with the gardens of the Zoological Society on its N. side. To these has been added, within recent years, Victoria Park, situated within the more easterly portion of the metropolis. The city is represented in parliament by four members; there are, besides, two for the city of Westminster, and two each for the boroughs of Marylebone, Finsbury, Tower Hamlets, Hackney, Chelsea, Southwark, and Lambeth.—A town in Upper Canada, 120 m. SW. of Toronto, and on the line of railway thence to Detroit.

Lora, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 28 m. ENE. of Seville. Pop. 4630.

Lorca, a city of Spain, in Murcia. A great quantity of barilla is produced in the vicinity, and there are potteries and saltpetre works. The chief resources of the town consist in its great September fair, its markets, and the produce of its neighbourhood, both in flocks and corn. The vale of Lorca is remarkable for picturesque beauty and fertility. Pop. 48,000.

Lord Howe's Islands, a small group in the S. Pacific; lat. 5.30 S., lon. 159.31 E.

—Another group in the same ocean, to the E. of Australia, lat. 31.37 S., lon. 159.14 E.—Also, an island in the S. Pacific, to the westward of the Society Islands, lat. 16.50 S., lon. 151.21 W.

Loretto, a fortified town of Italy, 12 m. S. of Ancona, near the coast of the Adriatic. The cathedral contains the Casa Santa [Holy House], in which it is pretended the Virgin Mary lived at Nazareth: the said dwelling having been conveyed by angels, first to Tersatto in Dalmatia, and thence, by the same agency, in 1294, to its present site! This miraculous edifice is a mean-looking hovel, about 30 feet long, and 18 in height, apparently built of limestone, but encased in marble, sculptured with bas-reliefs representing the history of the Virgin. The famous "Lady of Loretto," adorned with jewels, stands upon the altar, in a niche of silver, surrounded by numerous gold and silver lamps. Great numbers go in pilgrimage to Loretto, and every pilgrim, after having performed his devotion, makes the Virgin a present! so that the treasury of this chapel is immensely rich. Lat. 43.27 N., lon. 13.38 E.—A small town in Lower California, near the E. coast of the peninsula.

Lorgues, a town in Var, France. Pop. 3340.

Luckipoor, a town of Hindoostan, prov. Bengal, near the mouth of the Brahmapootra.

Lucknow, a populous city of Hindoostan, capital of the province (and formerly of the native kingdom) of Oude. Lucknow presents to the distant view a confusion of gilded cupolas and pinnacles, turrets, minarets, and arches, bounded by the winding Goomty, and so thickly interspersed with the richest tropical foliage, as apparently to realise the most fantastic visions of Oriental splendour; but a nearer inspection does not fulfil the traveller's expectations. There are, however, many palaces, handsome mosques, royal tombs, and pagodas. Lucknow had an important share in the transactions connected with the sepoy insurrection of 1857, when the British Residency was gallantly defended (during a siege of several months' duration) against the surrounding hosts of the insurgent army. Subsequently to the relief of the besieged, the city was abandoned for a time to the insurgents, but was retaken by

Its inhabitants are chiefly Iliyauts, of the Bakhtiyari tribe. They live in villages, of 20 or 30 houses each, dispersed among the mountains. It contains no towns of any magnitude.

Lus, a province of Beloochistan, lying on the sea-coast east of Mekran. It is the smallest prov. in that country, but the most level, and rich in grain, sheep, and goats.

Lusatia, formerly a margravate of Germany, divided into Upper and Lower. Upper Lusatia abounds more in mountains and hills than the Lower, in which are many boggy and moorland tracts, yet it is the most fruitful. Upper Lusatia belongs to Saxony, and Lower Lusatia to Prussia.

Lusignan, a town in Vienne, France.

Luton, a town in Bedfordshire, on the Lea; with a manufacture of straw hats, &c. Pop. 15,329.

Lutterworth, a town in Leicestershire, on the Swift. It has a large church, of which Wickliff, the first reformer, was rector, and he died here in 1385. Here is an extensive cotton manufacture, and many hands are employed in the stocking trade. Pop. 2030.

Lutzelstein, a town of Lower Rhine, France, with a strong castle.

Lutzen, a town of the Prussian States, prov. Saxony, with a castle. Here Napoleon defeated the combined armies of Prussia and Russia in 1813. Pop. 1700.

Luxemburg, a grand duchy of Germany, not included within the German Empire, but attached to the kingdom of the Netherlands. A portion of the former territory of Luxemburg is now, however, comprehended within Belgium. The territory includes the ancient forest of Ardennes; but, in general, is fertile in corn and wine, and has a great number of iron mines. The principal rivers are the Moselle, Sure, Ourte, and Semoy. This duchy formerly belonged to the house of Austria; but, by the Congress of Vienna in 1815, it was ceded to the king of the Netherlands.—The cap. of the above grand duchy. It stands on the small river Alzette (a tributary of the Moselle), and is built partly on a steep rocky height, and partly in the valley beneath; being, consequently, divided into the upper and lower towns, which communicate by flights of steps. Pop. 11,100.

Luxeuil, a town of France, dep. Haute-Saône, chiefly remarkable for its hot springs. Pop. 3400.

Luzon, the chief of the Philippine Islands. It is well watered, and contains both volcanos and hot springs. The produce is wax, cotton, silk, wild cinnamon, sulphur, cocoanuts, rice, gold, copper, horses, buffalos, and game. The principal part of the island is subject to the Spaniards, but the inhabitants are a mixture of several nations. The blacks have long hair and good features; and there is one tribe, called Pintados, who tattoo their skins.

Maassluis, a town of Holland, near Rotterdam, on a branch of the Maas. P. 4500.

Macao, a town and settlement of the Portuguese in China, on an island at the entrance of the Canton river. Near this town is the cave where the celebrated Camoens wrote the greatest part of the Lusiad. Macao was given to the Portuguese by the Chinese emperor in 1586. Lat. 22.12 N., lon. 113.37 E. Pop. 30,000.

Macapa, a town of S. America, in Brazilian Guiana. Lat. 0.4 N., lon. 51.0 W.

Macarsca, a sea-port town of Dalmatia (Austrian Empire), on the E. shore of the Adriatic. Pop. 1800.

Macarthy's Island, an island and British possession in the river Gambia, W. Africa. It is situated 250 m. above the mouth of the river, and has an area of 3 sq. m., with about 1600 inhab., very few of whom are whites. Some trade in ivory, gold-dust, bees-wax, and other African produce, is carried on thence.

Macassar, the principal town of Celebes. It is a Dutch settlement, with a good harbour, defended by Fort Rotterdam. Macassar surrendered to the British in 1810, without any resistance. Lat. 5.9 S., lon. 119.36 E. Pop. 20,000.

Macclesfield, a town in Cheshire, near the Bollin. It has manufactures of silk, cotton, fustians, linen cloth, &c., the silk manufacture affording employment to the largest part of the population. Here is a grammar school founded by Edward VI. Pop. 35,450.—A town of South Australia, situated 34 m. SE. of Adelaide, amongst the hills of the Mount Barker range.

Macduff, a town of Scotland, in Banffshire, with a good harbour.

Macedonia, a territory of Turkey in Europe, forming part of Roumelia. The soil is, for the most part fertile, and the coasts in particular abound in corn, wine, and oil. It includes the towns of Uskup, Monastir, and Saloniki.

Macerata, a city of Central Italy, Papal States, with a university. Lat. 43.20 N., lon. 13.27 E. Pop. 15,600.

Machias, a sea-port of Maine, the most eastern of the United States. The trade is considerable in fish, lumber, boards, shingles, and hewed timber. It was taken by the British in 1814. Lat. 44.48 N., lon. 67.17 W.

Machynlleth, a town of Wales, in Montgomeryshire, seated on the Dyfi. Pop. 2042.

Macon, a city of France, cap. of the dep. of Saône-et-Loire; and chiefly dependent on its wine-trade. Pop. 12,600.—A town of Georgia, U. S., situated on the river Ocmulgee, 30 miles SW. of Milledgeville. Pop. 3900.

Macquarie, Port, a sea-port town and harbour on the E. coast of New South Wales, at the mouth of the river Hastings, about 200 m. N. of Sydney.—A river of New South Wales, flowing on the inland side of the Blue Mountains, in a NW. direction. After a course of about 230 m. its waters are lost in some extensive marshes. It was in the valleys of the upper feeders of this river that gold was first discovered in Australia, in 1851.—A harbour on the W. coast of Tasmania.

Macri, a town of Anatolia, in Asiatic Turkey, supposed to occupy the site of the ancient Telmessus.

Macronisi, an island of the Archipelago, near the coast of Livadia. Lat. 37.30 N., lon. 24.16 E.

Macroon, a town in Cork co., Ireland. Pop. 3283.

Madagascar, an island in the Indian Ocean, 900 miles long and nearly 300 broad, discovered by the Portuguese, in 1492. It lies 40 leagues E. of the continent of Africa, from which it is separated by the Straits of Mozambique. The inhabitants are divided into a number of tribes, and the island into 28 provinces, all of which have their separate chiefs, though they are tributary to the Ovahs, whose head exercises sovereign rule over the island. They are in general tall, well made, and of an olive complexion; their hair is black, but not woolly. Both men and women are fond of bracelets, necklaces, and ear-rings. The island contains a great number of locusts, crocodiles, cameleons, and other animals common to Africa, but no elephants, tigers, lions, nor horses. Insects are numerous. The country yields several sorts of timber, and many articles of marine stores; also, indigo, crystals, tortoise-shell, ebony, gums, and honey; but commercial intercourse with Europeans has (until within a very recent period) been entirely suspended during the last 30 years, by the determined hostility of the native sovereign. The population of Madagascar is estimated at between four and five millions. Tananarivo, in the interior, is the chief city of the island.

Madeira, a fine and fruitful island, belonging to Portugal, in the North Atlantic Ocean, lying 250 miles N. by E. of Teneriffe, and being 46 miles long by 7 broad. The Portuguese discovered Madeira in 1419, when they found it uninhabited and covered with wood. It has long been celebrated for its abundant vine-produce, which, however, has almost entirely disappeared within recent years, owing to a disease which attacked the vines throughout the island. The cedar-tree is found in great abundance, and the dragon-tree is a native of this island. Flowers nursed in the English greenhouses grow wild here in the fields; and the hedges are mostly formed of the myrtle, rose, jasmine, and honey-suckle. "Here," says a modern traveller, "all is sunshine; the green bananas, with their beautiful feathery tops, tell the visitor that he has bid farewell to Europe; the orange-trees hold out their branches, laden with golden fruit. Plantations of coffee-trees fill the spaces between the houses, the splendid coral-tree hangs over his head, and the snowy bells of the tulip-tree mingle with the scarlet hybiscus." Every part of Madeira, not encumbered with rocks, is extremely fertile; the hills are covered with luxuriant vegetation, and the mountain-scenery of the interior is bold and highly romantic. The pop. of Madeira, 116,000 in number, were, until within a recent period, almost exclusively engaged either in the culture of the grape or in the wine-trade, and great distress has ensued from the destruction of the vineyards. The cap. of the island is Funchal.

Madera, a large river of South America, forming the chief tributary of the Amazon. It is formed by the union of the rivers Guapore and Mamore, and has a NE. course through Brazil.

Madeley Market, a town in Shropshire, celebrated for a barn, which afforded refuge to Charles II. in his flight after the battle of Worcester. Pop. 9469.

Madras (Presidency of), an extensive division of British India, being the second in rank and the most southerly of the three presidencies. It is of a triangular shape, and extends from 74° to 85° E. lon., and from 8° to 20° N. lat., its greatest length being about 950 m. The surface consists of a central table-land, surrounded on all sides by an undulating or plain country, gradually diminishing in elevation as it approaches the sea. The W. coast is exposed to all the fury of the monsoon, with heavy rains and thunderstorms. Rice, sugar, pepper, the cocoanut, maize, cotton, the various fruits, and other productions of Hindoostan, are all here cultivated; and teak, ebony, sandal, and other valuable timber trees grown. The Madras Presidency includes, in all, an area of 135,680 sq. m., with a population of 23,000,000.

Madras, a maritime city of Southern India, and the capital of the above Presidency. It is defended by Fort St George, which fronts the sea. The portions of Madras that are occupied by Europeans are scattered over an extensive space, to the W. and SW. of the fort. They contain many fine edifices, conspicuous amongst which are the Government House, and the Cathedral of St George. The Black Town, which is walled and fortified, stands to the north of the fort, and is inhabited by Gentoos, Mohammedans, Armenians, and Jews. Madras was settled by the English in 1639. It carries on a great and extensive commerce, notwithstanding that large vessels cannot approach within two miles of its shore. Pop. about 700,000.

Madre de Dios, a group of islands in the Pacific Ocean, near the coast of Patagonia. Lat. 51.0 S., lon. 42.0 W.

Madrid, the capital of Spain, in New Castile; the largest and finest town in the kingdom. It stands in a sterile plain, surrounded by mountains; and contains numerous churches and convents, besides several magnificent palaces and squares, and nearly 100 towers or steeples in different places, which contribute greatly to the embellishment of the place. The great walks constitute another grand feature of the city. The Prado, or public promenade, is as fashionably attended, especially on Sunday, as Hyde Park in London; nor can any better idea of the out-of-door appearance of the population be got than by observing them on the Prado. The ladies generally wear black silk dresses, with mantillas of various colours, their head-dress consisting merely of a slight veil attached to the hair by a comb, and falling on the shoulder; the dress of the men differs scarcely at all from that of the French or English, except that they usually cover their persons with large cloaks, which they wear very gracefully. Morals in all classes, especially the higher, are in the most degraded state; the men think little of their marriage obligations; the women make dress and show the business of their lives; court admiration, and are willing victims of unprincipled gallantry. Madrid has royal manufactures of china, cards, saltpetre, &c., but it has little trade, and chiefly prospers by the presence of the court. It is seated on the river Manzanares, which joins the Jarama, an affluent of the Tagus. Pop. about 475,000.

Madridejos, a town of Spain, prov. Toledo. Pop. 5140.

Maelstrom, a dangerous whirlpool on the coast of Norway, at the south end of the Loffoden Islands, and near that of Moskoe. It is caused by a furious current, which runs among these isles, flowing contrary to the motion of the tide, through a channel that has great and sudden inequalities of depth; and here, when its violence in calm weather is greatest, the vortex is tremendous. When the stream or whirlpool is most boisterous, and its fury heightened by a strong west wind, it roars equal to the loudest cataract. The intervals of tranquillity are at the turn of the ebb and flood, which last only half an hour, its violence gradually returning.

Maestricht, a fortified town of Holland, prov. Limburg, on the left bank of the Maas (or Meuse), opposite Wyk, with which it communicates by a stone bridge. Near the city is the lofty mountain of St Peter, with a fortress; and a stone quarry, with such a number of subterranean passages as to be capable of containing 40,000 persons. Maestricht is deemed one of the strongest places in Europe. There are manufactures of woollen cloths and flannels, fire-arms, tobacco, pins, &c., soap factories, tanneries, breweries, and dye-houses, and a considerable trade is carried on with various places on the Meuse. Maine, one of the United States of America, 200 miles long and 120 broad; being the most northerly and most easterly State in the Union. The chief rivers are the Penobscot, Kennebec, Soco, Androscoggin, St John, and St Croix; and it has several small lakes. The greater portion of the State was originally covered with dense forests of fine fir, beech, &c., but many of these have been cleared; and till lately the rearing of sheep has been the most important branch of rural industry. The fisheries are inexhaustible; and ship-timber, boards, and every species of split lumber, are the principal exports of the country. Total pop. 628,000. — An old province of France, lying to the east of Bretagne. It now forms, with Perche, the departments of Mayenne and Sarthe.

Maine-et-Loire, a department of France, formerly comprising the greater part of the province of Anjou. Pop. 534,300.

Mainland, the largest of the Shetland Isles. It consists of black craggy hills and marshy plains, interspersed with smooth and fertile spots. Neither tree nor shrub is to be seen, except the juniper and the heath. The hills are covered with beeves and sheep of a small breed; the horses are of diminutive size, but remarkably strong (known as Shetland ponies). The rivulets and lakes are rich in salmon, trout, &c.; and the seas abound with cod, turbot, haddock, and herrings. The inhabitants manufacture linen and woollen cloth and worsted stockings, but their principal occupation is fishing. — The principal of the Orkney Islands, called also Pomona.

Maintenon, a town of France, in the department of Eure-et-Loire. Pop. 1450.

Malta, an island of the Mediterranean, between Africa and Sicily, belonging to Great Britain; containing two cities and 22 villages, and having several harbours on the coast opposite Sicily. The Port of St Paul is so called from a tradition that the vessel in which St Paul was sent prisoner to Rome was wrecked on the north point of its entrance. Malta is naturally a barren rock, but industry has overcome the sterility of the soil, and in it are cultivated large quantities of cotton, lemons, almonds, olives, and vines. The common people speak Arabic, but the better sort Italian; they are as dark as the natives of Barbary, but without the Arab features: the working classes are described as laborious and frugal; and the Maltese are celebrated all over the Mediterranean for their good and intrepid seamanship. The Emperor Charles V., in 1526, gave this island to the order of St John of Jerusalem, or Knights of Rhodes, who removed hither in 1530; and hence were called Knights of Malta. Valetta, the capital of the island, is strongly fortified. The central position, excellent port, and great strength of Malta, make it an admirable naval station for the repair and accommodation of the men-of-war and merchant ships frequenting the Mediterranean, and render its possession of material importance to Great Britain. Pop. 144,000.

Malton, New, a bor. in Yorkshire, N. R., 9168. inhab.

Malvasia. See Monemvasia.

Malvern, Great and Little, two villages in Worcestershire, delightfully situated on the Malvern Hills. Malvern has long been noted for two medicinal springs, the chief of which (St Anne's Well) is bituminous, and enjoys a good reputation for the cure of nervous and cutaneous diseases: the other is a simple chalybeate, and little frequented. Pop. (of Great M.) 5693.

Malvern Hills, a range of hills in the south-west of Worcestershire, extending seven miles, and dividing this part of the county from Herefordshire. The highest point is 1444 feet above the sea. On the summit of one of these hills are the immense works of the Herefordshire Beacon, an ancient fortress of supposed early British construction.

Malwah, an inland province of Hindoostan Proper, and one of the most elevated and diversified tracts in the country. The principal rivers are the Nerbudda and Chumbul, with their tributaries. The climate is usually mild and salubrious, except for about two months after the rains, when fevers are very prevalent. Wheat, rice, sugar, tobacco, opium, cotton, turmeric, ginger, &c., are raised in pretty considerable quantities, but opium is by far the most valuable product. Malwah is the chief seat of the Bheel race, as it was of the Pindarry and Mahratta powers. It is almost wholly divided among the dominions of native princes, dependent upon British authority. Man, an island in the Irish Sea. It contains 17 parishes; and the chief towns are Castletown, Douglass, Peel, and Ramsey. The commodities of the island are wool, hides, butter, tallow, black marble, slate, limestone, lead, and copper. The duke of Athol was lord of this island, the sovereignty of which he sold, in 1765, to the crown; but he retained his territorial property. A further arrangement was made in 1826, and Britain now enjoys all the rights and privileges of sovereignty. Man used to be one of the principal seats of the herring-fishery; but for several years past it has been comparatively deserted by the herring shoals; since which there has fortunately been a material improvement in the habits and industry of the people. Pop. 52,469.

Manchester, a large town in Lancashire, seated between the rivers Irk and Irwell, and a place of great antiquity, though not enjoying parliamentary representation until 1832. It has been long noted for various branches of the linen, silk, and cotton manufactures; and is now principally conspicuous as the centre of the cotton trade. No town in the kingdom is more distinguished for its public charities; and it has many handsome buildings for amusement and convenience. Manchester possesses extensive communication by railway with all parts of the kingdom. From the year 1770, when machinery was first introduced into the town, till the present time, Manchester has been a scene of rapidly increasing industry: its working population supplies every quarter of the world with clothing; and wealth, the reward of successful labour, flows in from all sides. It contains, in proportion to its size, a greater number of opulent capitalists than any other town in the empire; the result of bold enterprise and unflagging perseverance. Pop., including Salford, 475,990.—A town of Vermont, U. S.—A town of Virginia.

Manchooria, an extensive region of Eastern Asia, the original seat of the present ruling dynasty of the Chinese empire. It is traversed by the great river Amoor. Chinese Manchooria is divided into three provinces: 1. Shingking, near the borders of China; 2. Kirin, occupying the country E. of the Songari; and 3. Tsitsikar, comprising the whole country W. and NW. of that river. The portion of Manchooria lying N. of the Amoor, with the coast district as far S. as lat. 41° 30', has belonged to Russia since 1847, and forms the territories of the Amoor, and the Littoral (or coast district).

Mediterranean Sea, an inland sea that extends between Africa and Europe into Asia; communicating with the Atlantic Ocean by the Strait of Gibraltar, and with the Black Sea by the Dardanelles, the Sea of Marmora, and the Strait of Constantinople. It is above 2200 m. in length, but has little or no tide, and a constant upper current sets in from the Atlantic, through the Strait of Gibraltar. The Mediterranean Sea was navigated, and its islands occupied, from the remotest antiquity; successively by the Phœnicians, Carthaginians, Greeks, and Romans. During the middle ages, and down to the discovery of America, it was the grand centre of the commerce and navigation of the Old World; and within the present century the renewed intercourse with India by way of Alexandria, the occupation of Malta by the English, and of Algiers by the French, the independence of Greece, and the establishment of steamers between the principal ports of the sea, have prodigiously extended its commerce and navigation. The shores of the Mediterranean were the earliest seats of art, science, and civilisation. In the words of Dr. Johnson, “On those shores were the four great empires of the world; the Assyrian, the Persian, the Grecian, and the Roman. All our religion, almost all our law, almost all our arts, almost all that sets us above savages, have come to us from the shores of the Mediterranean.”

Mersey, a river of England, which rises in the north extremity of the Peak in Derbyshire, receives the Tame at Stockport, and, lower down, the Irwell; it then passes by Warrington, and receives the Weaver, at Frodsham, where it forms a broad estuary, that contracts on its approach to Liverpool, below which it enters the Irish Sea.—An island in Essex, between the mouth of the Coln and the entrance of Blackwater Bay.

Merthyr Tydvil, a town of Wales, in Glamorganshire. Towards the middle of last century Merthyr was an insignificant village; but it has rapidly become the largest town in the county. It is indebted for its prosperity to its rich mines of coal, iron ore, and limestone. Pop. 51,949.

Mertola, a strong town of Portugal, prov. Alemtejo. Pop. 2400.

Merton, a village in Surrey, on the Wandle. It had a celebrated abbey, where Henry III., in 1236, held a Parliament, at which were enacted the Provisions of Merton, the most ancient body of laws after Magna Charta.

Merve (or Merou), a town of Turkestan, situated 345 m. S. E. of Khiva, in a fertile oasis of the Turcomanian desert. It was formerly more prosperous and important, but has declined since its pillage by the Usbeks, in the beginning of the present century. Pop. about 3000.

Meshid Ak, a town of Asiatic Turkey, lying not far from the W. bank of the Euphrates, to the south of Hillah, and on the skirts of the Arabian desert. It is revered as containing the tomb of Ali, the son-in-law of Mohammed.

Messina, a city and sea-port of Sicily, with a strong citadel and several forts. The city has a most imposing appearance from the sea, and being built of white stone, strikingly contrasts with the dark forests that cover the mountains in the background. The harbour is one of the safest in Europe, and has a quay above a mile in length. It has a trade in silk, oil, fruit, corn, and excellent wine. Pop. 112,000.

Methven, a town of Scotland, in Perthshire. Pop. 950.

Methwold, a market-town in Norfolk. Pop. 1509.

Métropoli, a town of the island of Candia, on the site of the ancient Gortinia, of which many vestiges remain.

Metz, a fortified city of Germany, territ. Alsace-Lorraine, situated on the riv. Moselle. Its siege by the Germans, in 1870, issued in its surrender, by France, after having been in the possession of that power since 1552. Pop. 51,000.

Metzovo, a town of European Turkey, prov. Albania, 23 m. N.E. of Janina.

Meurthe and Moselle, a dep. of France, part of the old province of Lorraine. A great quantity of vins ordinaires are made here; dried plums and preserved apricots form important articles of commerce: and the forests, which are extensive, furnish a good deal of timber.

Meuse, or Maes, a large river rising in France, in the department of Upper Marne, and flowing through the N.E. part of France, Belgium, and the S. of Holland.

Meuse, a dep. of France, including the west part of the old province of Lorraine. The surface is generally hilly, but the vine is cultivated with success. Iron, slates, and good building stone are the chief mineral products. Pop. 305,700.

Mexico, an extensive country of North America, lying intermediate between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans, and embracing a number of distinct states, which are together united into a federal republic. The surface forms a succession of high table-lands, bordered by low plains along the coast. The highest mountains are the volcanic cones that rise above the central plateaus. Although within the torrid zone, the climate is temperate and healthy. No country abounds more with grain, fruits, roots, and vegetables; and it is singularly fertile in plants that yield balsams, gums, resins, and oils. The mines produce sulphur, alum, vitriol, cinnabar, ochre, quicksilver, iron, lead, tin, copper, silver, and gold. Diamonds are also found; and there are amethysts, cats'-eyes, torquoises, cornelians, &c. There are valuable quarries of jasper, porphyry, and exquisite marble. The silver and gold mines of Mexico have always been deemed the main sources of its wealth; but the abundant capabilities of its soil are perhaps of truer value. The domestic animals of Europe, especially horned cattle, have multiplied here abundantly; they range over the immense plains in herds of from 30 to 40,000, and are killed merely for the sake of their hides, which are exported to Europe. Birds are very numerous; above 200 species are peculiar to the country. The inhabitants, estimated at 3,000,000, consist of native Spaniards, Creoles, Mulattos, and Mestizos.—The capital of the Mexican confederation, situated on a plateau elevated 7400 ft. above the sea, nearly midway between the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans. It is extremely well built; the streets are spacious, and so exactly disposed, that, in point of regularity, it is perhaps the finest city in the world. P. 200,000.

Mexico, Gulf of, an extensive arm of the Atlantic, nearly enclosed between the mainland of the American continent (by which it is bordered on the N. and W.) and the islands of the West Indies. The powerful current known as the "Gulf Stream," which traverses the North Atlantic Ocean, originates within its limits, and issues thence by the narrow channel of Florida, between the peninsula of that name and the nearest of the Bahama Islands.

Mexico, New, a territory belonging to the United States of North America, acquired by treaty with Mexico in 1848. It includes the upper portion of the valley of the Rio Grande del Norte and the southern branches of the Rocky Mountain system, embracing in all an area of 210,744 sq. m. New Mexico appears to possess considerable mineral resources; but most of the mines formerly worked by the Spanish settlers have been abandoned. The pop., only 93,000 in number, consists chiefly of Indians and mixed races. The town of Santa Fé is the cap. of the territory.

Mississippi, a great river of the U. S. of N. America, the basin of which extends N. and S. between the 29th and 48th parallels of N. lat.; and from the sources of the Alleghany, eastward, to those of the Missouri, westward, 1830 miles, including an area of more than a million sq. m. The Mississippi rises in Lake Itasca, within the State of Iowa, and flows with a southerly course of 3200 m. into the Gulf of Mexico. But the Missouri branch of the river which rises in the Rocky Mountains, exceeds the length of the main stream above the point of junction. From the source of the Missouri to the mouth of the Mississippi, the length of river channel is little short of 4000 miles. The banks of the Mississippi are in some places broken by precipitous bluffs, or intersected by deep ravines, and covered with forests of pine and cedar. This mighty river is subject to periodical inundations, the effect of which is greatly heightened by the flatness of the country in the lower part of its course. But the most dangerous obstruction to the navigation of the Mississippi arises from the multitude of large trees precipitated from its banks into the water. The navigation, however, has been prodigiously facilitated by the introduction of steamers.

Missolonghi, a town of Greece, in Livadia, on the Gulf of Patras; famous for its gallant resistance against the Turks in 1826.

Mongolia, a large tract of country in the NE. part of Asia, belonging to China. The central part is occupied by the great sandy desert, called Ta-Gobi, about 1200 miles in length, and averaging about 600 in breadth, though here and there intersected with patches of land comparatively fertile. The Mongols have neither towns, villages, nor houses, but lead a nomade life, passing the summer on the banks of rivers, and the winter at the foot of some mountain, which shelters them from the cold. They are open and sincere; and pride themselves chiefly on their dexterity in handling the bow and arrow, mounting on horseback, and hunting wild beasts. Almost every Mongol, indeed, is a skilful warrior and huntsman; but there are very few workmen or artificers; the Chinese supplying them with their dress, arms, saddles, tobacco, brandy, &c., receiving in exchange horses, camels, and oxen. All the Mongols are governed by khans, independent of each other; but all subject to the Emperor of China, whom they consider as the grand khan of the Tartars.

Murray, a river of Australia, and the most considerable in length of course and area of drainage that has been discovered on that continent. It rises on the inland side of the Australian Alps, and forms during the greater portion of its course the boundary between the colonies of New South Wales and Victoria. Afterwards entering the province of South Australia, it makes a southerly bend, and discharges into the Southern Ocean at Encounter Bay, passing immediately above its mouth through the shallow expanse of Lake Alexandrina. The length of the Murray exceeds 1200 miles, and the area of its drainage is probably not less than 200,000 sq. m. It is navigable during several months of the year, for a thousand miles above Lake Alexandrina, but the want of any safe channel of entrance limits the commercial advantages capable of being derived from so extensive a watercourse.

Murray, or Moray. See Moray.

Murrhardt, a town of Würtemberg, in the circle of Neckar. Pop. 2400.

Murrumbidgee, a river of New South Wales, Australia, forming one of the chief tributaries of the river Murray, which it joins in lon. 143.6 E. Above the junction it receives the stream of the Lachlan.

Murviedro (the ancient Saguntum), a town of Spain, prov. Valencia; interesting in a historical point of view, for the bravery by which it was defended against the attacks of the Carthaginian army under Hannibal (into whose hands it fell B.C. 219), and also on account of the numerous Roman antiquities still existing there. It exports oil, wine, wheat, &c. Pop. 5400.

Mysore, a large province of Southern Hindoostan. It is subsidiary to the British, and lies between the east and west ridges of the Ghauts, forming a high table land, near 3000 feet above the level of the sea. The climate is temperate and healthy. In the forests are many elephants and tigers; and oxen, buffaloes, and goats are numerous. The chief products are rice, cotton, pepper, cocoa, and betel-nuts, sugar-cane, butter, and oil; and iron-ore abounds in every part.—The capital is a city of the same name, seated on a lofty hill, 9 miles from Seringapatam. When under the rule of Hyder Ali and Tippoo Saib it was suffered to fall into decay, but it is now restored to its former importance. Lat. 12.19 N., lon. 76.42 E. Pop. 65,000.

Mytilene (the ancient Lesbos), an island of Turkey in Asia, in the Ægean Sea, about 33 m. long by 26 broad. The wines of Lesbos were amongst the most highly celebrated by the ancients, but they are no longer in such repute; corn, oil, figs, and other fruits, cotton, timber, pitch, honey, &c., are its chief products. Mytilene has two good harbours, Port Lero and Port Caloni. Its chief town, Castro, occupies the site of the ancient Mytilene.

Naples, a former kingdom, within which were comprehended the southern part of Italy and the adjacent island of Sicily. The well-grounded disaffection of the population towards the reigning family of Naples, and the earnest aspirations for political unity on the part of the Italian people, conspired to produce the insurgent movements which ensued upon the Franco-Sardinian and Austrian war of 1859; and the heroism of the patriot-soldier, Garibaldi, speedily accomplished (1860) the overthrow of the Neapolitan monarchy, and the transfer of this fine territory to the then king of Sardinia—a title thenceforward exchanged for “King of Italy.” The Neapolitan provinces are one of the most favoured regions of Europe: they include many beautiful plains and valleys, which, under the influence of a genial climate, present a striking luxuriance of vegetation and beauty of scenery. The Terra di Lavoro, round Naples, was known to the ancients by the appropriate name of Campania Felix. The admirable situation of Naples, not less than the fertility of the soil, is highly favourable to commerce. Its exports consist principally of olive oil, silk, flax, and hemp, wool, wine, corn, linseed, &c. The established religion is the Roman Catholic; but all sects are now tolerated. Pop. of former kingdom (including Sicily) 9,001,000.—The capital is a city of the same name, seated on the Bay of Naples, and the country around is the most beautiful that can well be imagined. The harbour is spacious, and protected by a mole, two castles, and several batteries. This city is well situated for commerce, and has all the necessities and luxuries of life in great profusion; but the inhabitants are notorious for laziness and dishonesty. The churches and convents of Naples, though inferior to those at Rome in point of architecture, surpass them in magnitude, and in the quantity of ornaments. Pop. 448,000.

—A town of Prussia, in Silesia, 29 m. SW. of Oppeln, with 7000 inh.—Another, distinguished as Neustadt-Eberswalde, in prov. Brandenburg, 28 m. NE. of Berlin. Pop. 6000.

Neutra, a town of Hungary, 70 m. NW. of Buda, capital of a county, with a castle and a college. Pop. 4090.

Neuville, several places in France:—1. in dep. Vienne: 2. in dep. Loiret: 3. in dep. Rhone, 9 m. N. of Lyons.

Neuwied, a town of Prussia, on the right bank of the Rhine, below Coblenz, with silk, cotton, and linen manufactures, and a trade in iron, potash, and pipe-clay. Pop. 6330.

Neva, a river of Russia, which issues from the Lake Ladoga, flows to Petersburg, and afterwards enters the Gulf of Finland.

Nevada, one of the U. S. of N. America, admitted into the Union in 1864. It lies W. of the Rocky Mountains, and adjoins the metalliferous range of the Sierra Nevada. Area, 45,812 sq. m.: pop. 42,500.

Nevers, a town of France, on the Loire, cap. of the dep. Nièvre. Nevers has a royal cannon foundry, iron-works, &c. It is the great entrepot for the Upper Loire. Pop. 14,300.

Nevin, a sea-port town of Caernarvonshire, with 1791 inh.

Nevis, one of the British W. India Islands, divided from the E. end of St. Christopher by a narrow channel. The inhabitants are occupied in the raising of the sugar-cane, and in the preparation of rum and sugar. Pop. 10,200.

Newark-upon-Trent, a bor. in Nottinghamshire. Here King John died; and here Charles I., after his defeat at Naseby, put himself into the hands of the Scotch. The ruins of the castle deserve notice. Pop. 12,195.—Newark, a city of New Jersey, U. S., situated on the Passaic river, 12 m. W. of New York. It is celebrated for eider, has many tanneries, and a considerable manufacture of shoes. Pop. 72,000.—A town of Upper Canada, on the west side of the river Niagara. Lat. 43.16 N., lon. 79.6 W.

New Bedford, a town and port in Massachusetts, eo. Bristol, U. S. Its inhab. are largely engaged in the whale fishery. Pop. 16,400.

Newbern, a town of North Carolina, cap. of Craven county, U. States. Pop. 4700.

Newbiggen, a fishing-village in Northumberland, near Morpeth.

Newborough, a town in Anglesey, Wales.

Newborough, or Gorey, a bor. of Ireland, in Wexford county. Pop. 4390.

New Brunswick, a prov. of the "Dominion of Canada," in North America, bounded by Nova Scotia, Quebec, and the State of Maine, U. S. The soil is in general very fertile, but large portions of the country are still covered with dense forests. The climate is very similar to that of Canada, and though severely cold, is very healthy. The coast and rivers of New Brunswick abound with fish, and the whale fishery has of late become of considerable importance. Pop. 285,000. The capital city is Fredericton.—A town of New Jersey, in the U. S. Pop. 13,400.

Newburgh, a town in Fifeshire, with a good harbour. The principal manufacture is linen. Pop. 2281.—A town and port of New York, U. S., on the river Hudson. Pop. 11,400.

Newbury, a town in Berkshire, on the Kennet. It was formerly celebrated for its manufactures of druggets, shalloons, and broad cloths; and has considerable traffic in malt. Pop. 6161.—A town of Vermont, U. S., chief of Orange county.—A town of South Carolina, U. S., capital of a county.

Newbury Port, a sea-port of Massachusetts, U. S. Pop. 9570.

Newcastle, a borough of Ireland, in Dublin co.—A town of Ireland, in Limerick county.—A town of Delaware, U. S., cap. of a county.—Another in Kentucky, chief of Henry county.—Another in Hanover county, Virginia.

Newcastle-Emlyn, a town in Caermarthenshire. Pop. 1980.

Newcastle-under-Lyme, a bor. in Staffordshire, on a branch of the Trent, in the neighbourhood of the Potteries. The manufacture of hats is the chief business. Pop. 15,948.

Newcastle-upon-Tyne, a bor. and sea-port of Northumberland, on the north side of the Tyne. The coal trade has been the source of great opulence to Newcastle; it also possesses manufactures of steel, iron, glass, soap, fine and coarse earthenware, and copperas; and it exports large quantities of lead, salt, salmon, butter, tallow, and grindstones. Newcastle has increased considerably in size within the last thirty years, and the general appearance of the town has become strikingly altered by the architectural improvements that have taken place. Pop. 128,443.

New England, the name usually given to the NE. portion of the U. States, which includes Vermont, New Hampshire, Massachusetts, Maine, Rhode Island, and Connecticut.—A district of New South Wales, in the NE. part of the prov., towards the head-waters of the Clarence river.

Newent, a town in Gloucestershire, seated on a branch of the Severn. Pop. 3182.

Newera Ellia, a town in the interior of Ceylon, 47 m. S. of Candy. It lies on a table-land that is 6300 ft above the sea level, and, from the cool temperature that it enjoys, is greatly resorted to as a sanitary station. Newera Ellia is of recent origin: a few years since, its site was a secluded plain upon the mountain-top, only visited by the elk and the wild-boar.

New Forest, in Hampshire, lying between Southampton Water and the Salisbury Avon. It was afforested by William I. His son, William II., when hunting in this forest, was shot by an arrow that accidentally glanced against a tree; and the site is now pointed out by a triangular stone.

Newfoundland, an island and British colony on the east coast of N. America, lying between 47° and 52° N. lat. It has numerous bays and harbours, with hilly and wooded tracts in the interior. The climate is severe in winter, but healthy. The native inhabitants have altogether disappeared, and have been replaced by a colonial population of British descent, whose chief employments are in connexion with the fisheries. In the fishing season for cod, which begins in May and ends in September, many of its bays and harbours are resorted to by at least 10,000 people; for here they cure and pack the fish, which are sent not only to England, but to the Mediterranean and the West Indies, in immense quantities. The salmon and seal fisheries are also very productive. There is great plenty of game, but very little corn, poultry, and cattle. Pop. 146,000. St. John's is the principal town.

New Granada (or United States of Columbia), a federal republic, within which are embraced the N.W. portions of the S. American continent, with the Isthmus of Panama. It borders both upon the Caribbean Sea and the Pacific Ocean, and includes a total area of 380,000 sq. m., with a pop. of 2,791,000. It exhibits extraordinary diversity of surface, from the snow-covered cordilleras of the Andes to the low plains that adjoin the coasts. Of its rivers, the Magdalena, with its tributary the Cauca, are the most important. New Granada is rich in minerals, and its abundance of vegetable produce is of still higher importance. Rice, cotton, tobacco, sugar, cocoa, and numerous tropical fruits, are amongst its produce, and its forests supply the inestimable cinchona (or Peruvian bark), besides a vast variety of hard-woods, medicinal herbs and drugs, &c. The white population of New Granada is almost wholly of Spanish descent, but the great majority of the inhab. are either Indians or people of mixed blood. This country, like all the adjacent portions of the New World, was for some centuries a colonial possession of Spain. Upon the assertion of their independence by the provinces of Spanish America, in the early part of the present century, it formed, with Equador and Venezuela, the republic of Columbia. Subsequently, in 1832, it became an independent republic, and has formed since 1857 a federal union composed of eight distinct states, under the title of the U. S. of Columbia. The federal cap. is Santa Fé de Bogotá.

Newhaven, a town in Sussex, near the mouth of the Ouse, with a small harbour.—A village on the S. shore of the Firth of Forth, Scotland, 1 m. W. of Leith.—A city and sea-port of Connecticut, U. States, capital of a county, and the semi-capital of the State. Newhaven contains Yale College, one of the most distinguished literary institutions of America; and it has a considerable foreign and coasting trade. Pop. 50,000.

Newmarket, a town in Suffolk, celebrated for horse-races. Pop. 4534.—A town in Cork county, Ireland.—A town of Virginia, in Amherst county, U. S.

Newmilns, a manufacturing village in Ayrshire, Scotland, 7 m. E. of Kilmar-nock. Pop. 2313.

Newnham, a town in Gloucestershire, seated on the Severn. Pop. 1483.

New Orleans, a flourishing city and seaport of the U. S., situated in the State of Louisiana, on the left bank of the Mississippi, 100 m. above its entrance into the Gulf of Mexico. From the lowness of its site, the climate is unhealthy, especially during the autumn months, when yellow fever is of almost universal prevalence. The commerce of New Orleans is, however, very extensive, as it forms the seaward outlet for the extensive valley of the Mississippi. Cotton, grain, and bacon, are its most considerable articles of export. In the total amount of its export trade, New Orleans ranks second only to New York. Pop. 191,000.

New Plymouth, the chief town of the prov. of Taranaki, New Zealand. The previous prosperity of this province has been seriously checked by the war between the colonists and the native population. It has about 4000 inhab. The town lies on the W. coast of the North Island, at the base of Mount Egmont.

Newport, the chief town in the Isle of Wight. Pop. 7934. — A market-town in Shropshire, with 3202 inhabitants. — A town in Monmouthshire, on the Usk; extensively engaged in the iron and tin trade, and in the export of coals. Pop. 27,069. — A town in Pembrokeshire, on a bay of the same name, at the mouth of the Nefer. — A town of Ireland, in Mayo county. — A town in Tipperary county, Ireland. — A sea-port town of the State of Rhode Island, U. S. Pop. 12,000. There are also several other places of this name in the U. S.

Newport Pagnell, a town in Buckinghamshire, on the Ouse. Pop. 3676.

Newry, a borough of Ireland, in Down county, situated in the valley of the Newry River, a short distance above the head of Lough Carlingford, with a considerable linen manufacture, and a trade in shipping. Pop. 11,426.

New South Wales, a British colony, situated on the E. side of the Australian continent, and the earliest-settled of the possessions of Britain in that part of the world. New South Wales extends along the shore of the Pacific from the parallel of 29° S. to Cape Howe (at the SE. extremity of Australia), and stretches inland as far as the meridian of 141°, which divides it from the colony of South Australia. To the southward, it adjoins the province of Victoria, the course of the river Murray forming the line of division between the two; on the north, it is bounded by the province of Moreton Bay (until recently comprehended within its limits). The area of the entire colony is probably not less than 300,000 sq. m. The most prominent natural feature of New South Wales is the extended chain of heights that stretches along its seaward portion (at a distance of about 60 miles inland), under the names of the Blue Mountains, the Liverpool Range, and other appellations. Between these mountains and the ocean are numerous rivers, flowing through districts well adapted for the operations of agriculture. Upon the inland side of the mountain-cordillera, the country spreads out in wide open plains, better suited for pastoral purposes; and the vast flocks of sheep reared there furnish the wool which constitutes the most important item in the produce of the colony. Gold is found in several parts of New South Wales, within the valleys that descend from the inland face of the mountain-region (especially within the basin of the Macquarie River), but in much smaller quantity than in the neighbouring province of Victoria. The coasts of New South Wales were surveyed by Captain Cook in 1770, and the first settlement was made upon its shores in 1788, when the foundations of Sydney were laid upon the shores of Port Jackson, the most magnificent of natural harbours. Originally used as a convict settlement, the progress of the colony was slow during the first 30 years of its existence. Even as late as 1833, nearly half the colonial population consisted of actual convicts, while of the remainder a large portion had originally proceeded thither as such. But the influx of free emigrants had already commenced, and the discovery of its golden wealth eighteen years later (in 1851) gave a vast impetus to emigration to the Australian shores. In 1871, New South Wales had a colonial population numbering upwards of 500,000, almost entirely of British descent. A considerable portion of the interior of the colony is yet unexplored, but the surveyed portions have been divided into 46 counties. An act of the imperial parliament, passed in 1850, bestowed upon the different Australian colonies the power of self-government, exercised through the medium of a local legislature, and under the direction of a governor appointed by the crown; and the abolition of the practice of sending convicts from the mother-country thither had already removed the chief impediment to the continued progress (social as well as commercial) of this flourishing province. The capital of the colony is Sydney.

Newstead, a village of Nottinghamshire, near which is Newstead Abbey, memorable as the former seat of the Byron family.

Newton-Abbot, a market-town in Devonshire (England), situated on the river Teign, 14 m. SSW. of Exeter. Pop. 5221. — There are also several places of the name of Newton, in various counties of England. Among the most important are Newton-Heath, a chapelry in Lancashire, 3 m. NE. of Manchester, with extensive cotton manufactures; pop. 18,103; and Newton in Mackerfield, also in Lancashire, on the line of railway between Liverpool and Manchester. Pop. 8244.

Newton Ards, a town in Down co., Ireland, with an extensive diaper manufacture. Pop. 9521.

Newton Limavady, a rapidly increasing town in Londonderry, Ireland, with a linen manufacture. Pop. 2734.

Newton Stewart, a town in Tyrone county, Ireland, on the river Mourne. — A town in Wigtonshire, Scotland, on the river Cree. Here are manufactures of cotton and carpets, and several tan-works. Pop. 2535.

Newtown, a thriving town in Montgomeryshire, with a number of flannel manufactories. Pop. 5744.—A decayed borough in the Isle of Wight.—There are numerous places in the United States of this name, but none of them of any more than local importance.

New York, one of the United States of North America, and, in point of population and wealth, the most important member of the Union. The State of New York embraces an area of 46,085 sq. miles, with a pop. of 4,371,000. From the shores of the Atlantic Ocean, it stretches inland to the waters of Lakes Erie and Ontario and the river St Lawrence, including the northerly portion of the Alleghany mountain-system. It has numerous rivers, of which the Hudson constitutes the most important channel for commerce, and is extensively navigated by steamers. Iron, lead, and other metallic ores, are extensively distributed throughout the State, but agricultural and commercial pursuits employ the industry of the greater number of the population.—The city of New York, the largest place in the State, and the commercial metropolis of the New World, is situated at the mouth of the river Hudson, occupying a narrow tongue of land between that stream and the neighbouring channel of Long Island Sound (or the East River, as it is locally termed). New York was originally founded by the Dutch, and bore the name of Fort Amsterdam. The amount of its foreign commerce is equal to a third of that enjoyed by the entire Union, and its increase in trade, population, and wealth, is very rapid. New York is a well-built and beautiful city, laid out (for the most part) with great regularity. The enormous scale of its hotels attract strikingly the notice of visitors from European lands. Its public buildings, of every description, are numerous and extensive. Brooklyn, situated at the western extremity of Long Island, forms a kind of suburb of New York, constant communication between the two being maintained by steamers. Pop. (including Brooklyn) 1,238,000.

New Zealand, a group of islands in the S. Pacific Ocean, forming one of the colonies of Great Britain. New Zealand consists of two large islands (divided by the channel of Cook Strait), and one of smaller size, besides numerous adjacent islands. The two large islands are best distinguished as the North and South Islands: the third in point of size is called Stewart Island. New Zealand is one-fifth larger than Great Britain in point of area—its superficial dimensions being about 99,500 sq. Engl. m. Its climate bears considerable resemblance to that of Britain, being temperate, and perfectly healthy, though perhaps somewhat moister than the climate of most parts of England. Its interior exhibits great diversity of surface and scenery. The mountains in the S. Island reach above 13,000 ft. in height, and some of those in the North Island are upwards of 8000 ft. From these high grounds, numerous streams descend to the sea on either hand. The forests of New Zealand include several valuable kinds of timber, but few of the native fruits are of much value as food-plants. All the grains and fruits that are capable of culture in Britain will, however, flourish, and large portions of either island are well adapted for the operations of agriculture. The discovery of valuable gold-fields in the S. Island (chiefly within the prov. of Otago) has greatly stimulated the advancing prosperity of the colony as a whole, and added largely to the numbers of the colonial population; but the northern provinces have suffered severely from hostilities between the colonists and the natives. The numbers of the latter (who are known as Maories, and are a fine race) have undergone a great decline since the period of New Zealand colonisation, and they are now fewer than 45,000—mostly located within the N. Island. The colonial pop. is upwards of 300,000. New Zealand includes nine provinces—Wellington, Auckland, Taranaki, and Hawke Bay, on the N. Island: Nelson, Marlborough, Canterbury, Otago, and Southland, on the S. Island. The town of Auckland was until 1865 the seat of general gov. for the colony, but Wellington is now the colonial cap. New Zealand was discovered by Tasman in 1642, and afterwards more fully examined by Capt. Cook.

Neyland, a town of Suffolk, on the Stour, with a manufacture of baize. Pop. 1061.

Neyva, a river and bay of St Domingo.—A town of Colombia, chief of the province of the same name, situate on the Magdalena. This province produces chiefly cocoa, but there are also mines of gold.

Ngami, a large fresh-water lake of South Africa, situated in S. lat. 20.30, above 500 miles distant from the northern frontier of the Cape Colony. It was first reached by Europeans in 1849. The river Tioghè enters the NW. extremity of Lake Ngami: a stream called the Zouga issues from its lower end, and is lost in the sand of the adjacent deserts.

Ngan-chan, a first-rate city of China. Lat. 26.12 N., lon. 105.37 E.

Ngan-king, a city of China, capital of the west part of Kiang-nan. Lat. 30.37 N., lon. 116.45 E.

Ngan-lo, a city of China, of the first rank, which has a considerable trade. Lat. 31.14 N., lon. 112.3 E.

Niagara, a river of North America, which forms the communication between the lakes of Erie and Ontario. The stupendous Falls of Niagara, 164 ft in perpendicular depth, occur in its mid-course.

Nicaragua, a republic of Central America, the south-western border of which is formed by the waters of the Pacific Ocean, whence it extends across the isthmus to the waters of the Caribbean Sea, the former Mosquito territory being now included within its limits. Nicaragua includes not less than 58,000 sq. m. of surface, and has a population of 400,000—chiefly located along the line of the

HE THAT KNOWS NOT WHEN TO BE SILENT, KNOWS NOT WHEN TO SPEAK.

Pacific coast. It includes within its limits the large lake of Nicaragua, with the smaller lake of Managua, or Leon. Nicaragua shares in the rich vegetable produce which distinguishes the intratropical regions of the New World, but frequent political convulsions have hitherto operated as a bar to the peaceful pursuits of industry, and retarded the development of its abundant resources. The majority of the pop. are Indians and mixed races, the whites being principally of Spanish descent. Managua is the present capital.—The town of Nicaragua lies 4 m. distant from the lake of that name, on the narrow neck of land that intervenes between its waters and the Pacific.—Lake Nicaragua has an area of 3500 sq. m., and, through the channel of the river San Juan, which issues from its lower extremity and enters the Caribbean Sea, affords a ready means of communication between the opposite coasts of the New World. The western shores of Lake Nicaragua are only divided from the coast of the Pacific by a neck of land 11 miles across. The lake is of considerable depth throughout, and contains numerous islands.

Nicaria, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, to the SW. of Samos.

Nicastro, a town of the Neapolitan dom., prov. Calabria Ultra II. Pop. 6000.

Nice, a city and seaport of France, dep. Alpes Maritimes, formerly belonging to Sardinia, but transferred to France in 1860. It stands on the Mediterranean coast, near the mouth of the Var. The exports are silk, sweet oil, wine, cordials, rice, oranges, lemons, and dried fruits. Nice enjoys the reputation of a peculiarly genial climate, and is resorted to by invalids during winter. Pop. 20,500.

Nicholas, St., one of the largest and most pleasant of the Cape Verd Islands, between St Lucia and St Jago. Lat. 16.32 N., lon. 14.19 W.—A sea-port and cape of St Domingo. The cape, commonly called the Mole, is strongly fortified by nature and art, and commands the strait called the Windward Passage. Lat. 19.50 N., lon. 73.26 W.

Nicobar Islands, a group in the Indian Ocean, on the east side of the Bay of Bengal. They are almost entirely uncultivated; but the cocoa-nut and other tropical fruits grow spontaneously. The inhabitants are tall and well-proportioned, with dark copper-coloured skins.

Nicolaiev, a town and river-port of European Russia, in the province of Cherson, situated on the river Boug, above its entrance into the Dnieper. Pop. 63,000.

Nicolas, St., a town of Belgium, prov. E. Flanders; with manufactures of woollen, cotton, and silk fabrics, hats, paper, soap, chocolate, &c., and the largest market for flax in Europe. Pop. 13,800.—A town in France, dep. Meurthe, with 3200 inh.

Nicopoli, a town of European Turkey, in Bulgaria, on the S. bank of the Danube; famous for the first battle fought between the Turks and Christians, in 1396. It is surrounded by strong ramparts mounted with cannon.

Nicosia, the capital of Cyprus, seated in a fine plain, bounded by lofty mountains. During the period that the island was subject to Venice many noble buildings were erected, most of which are now in ruins; but the houses are interspersed with gardens containing olive, lemon, and pomegranate trees. Pop. 12,000.—A town in Sicily, 40 m. WNW. of Catania. Pop. 13,000.

Nidau, a town in Berne, Switzerland, near the NE. extremity of Lake Bienne.

Niemen, a river of European Russia, which flows through the Lithuanian provinces and enters the Baltic Sea, passing for a short distance above its outlet through the Prussian territory.

Nienburg, a strong town of N. Germany. Lat. 52.39 N., lon. 9.15 E.—A town of Anhalt-Koethen, Germany, 18 m. S. by E. of Magdeburg. Pop. 1900.

Nieuport, a town of Belgium, prov. West Flanders, at the mouth of the Yperlee.

Nièvre, a department of France, including the old province of Nivernois. It is watered by the Loire, Allier, Yonne, Nièvre, and other rivers; and its forests and mines of iron furnish its chief resources. Pop. 326,000.

Niger, or Quorra, a great river of Central and Western Africa, which rises on the inland side of the Kong Mountains, and, after a circuitous course of more than 2000 miles, enters the Gulf of Guinea. Its upper portion bears the name of Joli-ba, or Great Water. The course of the Niger was traced downward by Mungo Park, in 1795, as far as Boussa; but he was there killed, and his papers were lost. Other travellers have been unsuccessful, and some of them equally unfortunate. Lander, the servant of Captain Clapperton (who was murdered near Saccatoo), sailed from Boussa, with the stream, to the mouth of the river, previously called the Nun, in the Bight of Benin; thus tracing the river to its final outlet in the waters of the Atlantic, and solving a great problem in African geography. The lower course of the Niger has been several times ascended by steamers, and its capability of being used as a channel for the conveyance of commercial produce abundantly proved. But the unhealthiness of the climate, during certain portions of the year, constitutes a serious impediment to its utility. About 260 miles above its mouth the Niger receives the navigable stream of the Chadda.

Nigritia (that is, Negroland, or, as the Arabs call it, Soudan), a large country in the interior of Africa. Of this populous and extensive country, little more than the bare names of some of the towns and kingdoms of which it is composed was until a recent period known to Europeans. But the travels of Dr Barth have supplied much valuable information regarding the various native states comprised within its limits. These are described under their respective heads.

Nijar, a town of Spain, in Andalusia, 14 m. ENE. of Almeria. Pop. 5792.

Nijni-Novgorod, a gov. in the central part of European Russia, on both sides the Volga; a manufacturing as well as an agricultural district. Pop. 1,126,500.—

The city of Nijni-Novgorod, the cap. of the gov., situated at the confluence of the Oka with the Volga. It stands partly on a steep hill, the summit of which is occupied by the Kremlin, or citadel. Nijni is the grand entrepôt for the internal trade of Russia. The furs of Siberia; the teas of China; the metallic treasures of the Oural mountains; the silks, shawls, and other merchandise of Central Asia; and the produce of the S. parts of the empire, come thither, up the Kama, from Astrachan; while the manufactured goods of England, the wines of France, the cotton of America, &c., are conveyed there from Petersburg and Archangel. The great fair of Nijni has no parallel in the world. It begins on the 1st of July, and continues five or six weeks; the concourse of strangers is immense; and dealers from every civilized country on the globe may there be recognised. Pop. about 40,000; but during the fair it is frequently eight times that number.

Nikolsburg, a town of Moravia, circ. Brünn. It has manufactures of woollen and other stuffs, and some trade in wine and marble, produced in its vicinity. Pop. 8000.

Nile, a great river of Africa, which flows in a general northerly course through Abyssinia, Nubia, and Egypt, and enters the Mediterranean Sea by two channels, distinguished as the Rosetta and Damietta mouths. The most distant sources of the Nile are unknown: of the two streams which unite near the town of Khartoom, in Upper Nubia (lat. 15.30), the more easterly is distinguished as the Blue Nile, and the westerly as the White Nile. The former stream was traced upward by Bruce to its source in the Abyssinian Mountains, S. of Lake Dembea. The White Nile has been shown by the discoveries of Speke and Grant (1861-2) and more recently by those of Baker (1864), to derive a portion of its supply from the large lakes of Victoria Nyanza and Albert Nyanza; but it appears certain that its most distant source is within the yet unexplored region to the S. of the latter. Below Khartoom, the Nile receives only one considerable tributary, the Tecazze (or Atbara), and the middle and lower portions of its course, down to the head of the Delta, lie through a narrow valley, bordered by high chains of rocks upon either hand. The so-called "cataracts" of the Nile are really rapids. The most striking characteristic of the Nile is its annual rise, by which the valley on either hand is periodically flooded with its waters; on the retreat of the river into its proper bed, a fertilizing deposit is left upon the soil, to which the abundant harvests of Egypt are due.

Nimeguen, a strong city of Holland, cap. of Guelderland, with a citadel, an ancient palace, and several forts. Pop. 21,300.

Ning-koue, a city of China, of the first rank; noted for its manufacture of paper, made of a species of reed. Lat. 31.2 N., lon. 118.25 E.

Ning-po, a sea-port of China (prov. Chekiang), and a city of the first rank; famous for the manufacture of silk. It was one of the five ports opened to foreign trade by the treaty of 1842. Pop. 400,000.

Ninguta, a city of Eastern Tartary. Lat. 34.30 N., lon. 124.40 E.

Ninian, St., a town in Stirlingshire, with manufactures of leather, cotton cloth, &c. Pop. 9850.

Nio, an island of the Grecian Archipelago, to the south of Naxia, anciently called Ios. Lat. 36.43 N., lon. 25.35 W.

Niort, a town of France, cap. of dep. Deux Sèvres, and an entrepôt for the wines and other produce of the Gironde. Pop. 17,000.

Nippon, the largest and most northern island of Japan, containing the two capitals, Jedo and Miako. See Japan.

Nishapoor, a city of Persia, in Khorassan, 50 m. W. by S. of Mushed. There are valuable turquoise mines in its vicinity. Nishapoor is a city of high antiquity, but large portions are now in ruins.

Nisita, a fertile island in the Gulf of Naples.

Nismes, a city of France, cap. of the dep. of Gard, seated in a plain abounding in wine and oil. It has several monuments of antiquity, besides numerous large and handsome modern edifices. The chief manufactures are shawls and silk stuffs; but wine, brandy, and vinegar, essences, drugs, and colonial produce, are included in the trade of Nismes, and it is also the entrepôt for the raw silk produced in the S. of France. Pop. 47,000.

Nissa, a strong town of European Turkey. Lat. 43.32 N., lon. 22.32 E.

North Sea, that part of the Atlantic Ocean lying between the coasts of Britain on one side, and those of Holland, Denmark, and Norway, on the other. The German Ocean forms a portion of the North Sea.

Northallerton, a town in the N. R. of Yorkshire. It was in the immediate vicinity of this place (Standard Hill) that the famous "battle of the Standard" was fought between the Scotch, under David I., and the English, under the Earls of Albemarle and Ferrers, who, after a sanguinary conflict, came off victorious, A.D. 1138. Pop. 2663.

Northampton, a borough and the capital of the county of Northamptonshire, is seated on the Nen. The principal manufacture is that of boots and shoes; leather-carrying, saddlery, and the manufacture of light iron and brass-work are likewise rather extensively carried on: but the stocking and lace trades have greatly declined. Pop. 41,168.—A town of Massachusetts, U. S., cap. of Hampshire county. Lat. 42.24 N., lon. 72.38 W.—A town of Pennsylvania.

Northamptonshire, a county of England, 60 miles long and 22 where broadest, containing 650,240 acres, divided into 20 hundreds and 304 parishes, and having one city and 11 market-towns. In the NE. part, near Peterborough, commences a fenny tract, extending to the Lincolnshire Wash. With this single exception, Northamptonshire contains less waste ground, and more seats of the nobility and gentry, than any other county. It is peculiarly celebrated for grazing land: horned cattle, and other animals, are fed to extraordinary sizes; and many horses of the large black breed are reared. The principal rivers are the Nen and Welland; besides which it is partly watered by the Ouse, Leam, Cherwell, and Avon. Total pop. 243,891.

Northumberland Strait, a channel of the Gulf of St Lawrence, between Prince Edward Island and the coast of New Brunswick and Nova Scotia.

Northwich, a town in Cheshire, on the river Dane, with considerable salt-works, the mines furnishing immense quantities of solid rock salt, which is afterwards refined, and the brine springs supplying still more. Pop. 1244.

Norton Sound, an inlet of the Pacific, on the west coast of Russian America, discovered by Cook in his last voyage.

Norway, a country of Europe, part of the ancient Scandinavia, now united to the crown of Sweden; but though united, the constitution differs from that of Sweden in many important respects. Its breadth, which is very unequal, is from 40 to 280 miles; it is divided into 17 amts, or provinces. From its rocky soil and northern position, Norway does not produce sufficient corn for its own consumption; but it is rich in pasture, and feeds many cattle, sheep, and goats. The fisheries, particularly on the west coast, furnish employment for the natives, and serve as a nursery for seamen. Norway has extensive forests of oak, elm, fir, and pine; and the birch not only supplies fuel, but also a kind of wine. The general exports are tallow, butter, salt, dried fish, timber, planks, horses, oxen, silver, cobalt, alum, copper, and iron. It abounds in lakes and rivers; the former of which are very large. The wild animals are the elk, bear, lynx, wolf, glutton, fox, and hare; but the most singular creature is the leming, or Norwegian mouse, of a reddish colour, and about five inches long. These animals proceed in vast numbers from the ridge of Kolen towards the sea, devouring every product of the soil in their course. The religion of Norway is Lutheranism; all sects of Christians are, however, tolerated. The language is Danish, with a mixture of Swedish words. Pop. 1,753,000. The capital city is Christiania.

Norwich, a city of England, and capital of Norfolk, seated on the Yare, which is navigable to Yarmouth. There are, besides the cathedral, 36 parish churches, and several chapels. It has a stately castle, on a hill, which is the shire-hall and the county gaol; also, a city and county hospital, a good market-house, a free-school, founded by Edward VI., and several charitable institutions. Norwich has manufactures of crapes, bombazines, and stuffs of various kinds; in short, it has been celebrated for its manufactures from the time the Flemings first settled here (in the reign of Henry I.), and introduced the spinning and weaving of long woollen stuffs, called "worsted," from the name of the village in which the business was first established. Pop. 80,386.—A city of Connecticut, U. S., with 4200 inhab. Lat. 41.29 N., lon. 72.3 W.—A town of Vermont, in Windsor county.

Nottingham, a borough, and the capital of Nottinghamshire, is a handsome town, with a fine Exchange, Guildhall, and other public buildings. It is celebrated as being the great centre of the bobbinet and lace trades, and as one of the principal seats of the stocking manufacture, particularly of the finer kinds; the malt-ing business is likewise considerable, and in the neighbourhood are many coal-pits. Pop. 86,621.—A town of Maryland, U. S.—Another in New Hampshire.

Nottinghamshire, a county of England, 48 miles long and 20 broad, containing 535,680 acres, divided into seven hundreds and 208 parishes, and having nine market-towns. This county produces a kind of stone somewhat like alabaster, which, when burnt, makes a plaster exceedingly hard, and with this the inhabitants generally lay the floors of their upper rooms. The vale of the Trent is famous for its crops of oats, beans, &c.: the other commodities of the county are malt, hops, wool, liquorice, woad, and plenty of coal. Its principal rivers are the Trent and Idle. The manufactures chiefly consist of framework knitting, glass, and earthenware. Total pop. 319,758.

Novara, a city of N. Italy (former Sardinian States), 53 m. ENE. of Turin. It is the capital of the province of Novara, and possesses extensive markets for grain and flour. A victory gained in its vicinity by the Austrian troops over the Sardinian army, in 1849, decided the fate of the insurrectionary movements of Italy at that period. Pop. 14,000.

Nova Scotia, a British province of North America, forming one of the members of the "Dominion" of Canada. It has several lakes, and a vast number of small rivers. The climate, though healthy, is somewhat severe. The atmosphere is often clouded with fog, and for four months it is intensely cold. The forests still furnish abundance of valuable timber, and Nova Scotia possesses good coal fields, as well as iron and other ores. A valuable fishery is pursued round the extensive coasts of the peninsula. Lumber, coals, gypsum, grindstones, dried fish, and fish-oil, are the chief exports of the province. The pop., 387,000 in number, are chiefly of British origin. About 2000 of the native Indian race are still left. Halifax is the capital of the colony. Cape Breton Island, to the E. of Nova Scotia, is included within the government of that colony.

Nuremberg, a city of Bavaria, situated 95 m. N. of Munich, and formerly a free imperial city. It is surrounded by turreted walls and massive towers, and these are enclosed by a ditch, 100 ft wide and 50 ft deep, lined throughout with masonry. Several of the churches are highly deserving of notice, as are also its public fountains. Many useful mechanical inventions owe their origin to the ingenious workmen of Nuremberg in by-gone ages; and it had also a very extensive commerce, being a principal entrepôt for the produce of both the N. and S. of Europe. Though greatly declined since that period, it still ranks as one of the principal commercial cities of Bavaria. Nuremberg can boast of being the birth-place of several distinguished men, among whom was Albert Durer, born here in 1471. Pop. 83,000.

Nurtingen, a town of Würtemberg, in which is a celebrated hospital. Pop. 4000.

Ohio, a large river of the United States, which has its source in the Alleghany Mountains, in Pennsylvania, and is called the Alleghany during its SSW. course to Pittsburg, where it receives the Monongahela, and then takes the name of Ohio. After a further course of 950 miles, it enters the Mississippi in lat. 36.58 N.—One of the United States of N. America, deriving its name from the magnificent river above described, which forms the whole of its SE. and S. boundary. It is nearly square, the length and breadth being each about 200 miles. The mineral productions are iron, lead, and coal, and rich salt springs. Its coal-field is of immense extent and value. It is crossed near the middle by a chain of hills, where the waters run northward to Lake Erie, and southward to the Ohio. A larger quantity of wheat is raised in this State than in any other of the Union, and tobacco is also cultivated with success. Pigs, fat cattle, sheep, wool, and timber, are also among its chief products; and in manufacturing industry it takes a decided lead among the W. States. The greater portion of its foreign trade centres in New Orleans; and the number of excellent canals in Ohio renders it in internal communication a rival to New York. Columbus is the capital, but Cincinnati is by far its most important town. Total pop. 2,665,000.

Palermo, the capital of Sicily, situated on the north coast of the island, upon a bay of the same name, near the extremity of a kind of natural amphitheatre, formed by high and rocky mountains. The plain between the city and the mountains is naturally a magnificent garden, filled with fruitful trees, and watered by fountains and rivulets. Palermo has about 100 churches, many of them rich and magnificent; also 70 convents, with superb chapels to each. The cathedral is a large Gothic structure. There are several handsome squares and streets. Pop. 219,000.

Palestine (or The Holy Land), a country of Turkey in Asia, forming the SW. portion of Syria. No precise limits can be assigned in marking its extent, which, however, may be assumed as measuring about 200 miles from N. to S. (i. e. from Mt Hermon to the borders of Arabia Petræa), and about 75 in the direction of E. and W.—the total area which it embraces being about 15,000 sq. miles. The valley of the river Jordan—a long and narrow depression in the general level of the country—forms the most characteristic feature in the physical geography of the Holy Land; and the Dead Sea, into which the Jordan runs, is one of the most remarkable bodies of water in the world. The greater part of Palestine exhibits a succession of hills and valleys, with plains of moderate extent in particular localities. The parallel chains of Mount Lebanon, to the northward, reach upwards of 9000 ft in elevation, but the hills that diversify the general surface of the Holy Land are of greatly inferior altitude. In the valleys and watered plains the soil is fertile, and even in some places abundantly productive. The climate is warm, but it is only during the summer months that the heat is felt as oppressive. The name of Palestine is derived from that of the Philistines, who in ancient times occupied a portion of its south-western shores. In the present day, Palestine is comprised within the Turkish pashalicks of Damascus and Acre—chiefly the former. The inhabitants embrace a motley variety of Turks, Syrian Christians, Jews, Arabs, and other races. Jerusalem, Gaza, and Nablous, are the principal cities.

Pampas, the name given to numerous plains in South America, for the most part consisting of extensive grassy levels, though in some localities (as in the Pampas del Sacramento, in the NE. portion of Peru) they are covered with forests. The most extensive (and those to which the appellation of "the pampas" is most commonly applied) are the plains that stretch from the river Parana and the estuary of the La Plata across to the eastern base of the Andes. Immense portions of these plains exhibit a dead level, covered either with tall grass, or (at certain seasons) with gigantic thistles, and tenanted only by wild animals.

Pampeluna, or Pamplona, a city of Spain, capital of Upper Navarre, with a strong citadel and a university. Towards the close of the Peninsular war the vicinity of this town witnessed some obstinate conflicts between the French and English armies. Pop. 15,700.

Panagur, a town of Hindoostan, prov. of Gundwana, celebrated for numerous Hindoo temples.

Panama, a city of S. America, situated on the Pacific coast of the Isthmus to which its name is given, at the head of the Bay of Panama, and at the southward termination of the Panama railway. Prior to 1855, Panama was included within the republic of New Granada, but was in that year declared the capital of an independent republic. The state thus formed has subsequently (1863) become one of the confederated states which form the New Granadian or Columbian federation. The pop. of the state of Panama exceeds 173,000. The city of Panama has a good harbour, and carries on some export trade, but its chief importance consists in its position on the most frequented line of transit between the opposite shores of the New World. Pop. 10,000.

Panama, Isthmus of, the narrow neck of land which connects the North and South divisions of the American continent. At its narrowest limits, the Isthmus measures only 28 m. across, from the waters of the Atlantic Ocean on one side to those of the Pacific on the other; and throughout a range of more than 200 miles, the average breadth of land between the oceans on either side scarcely exceeds 50 miles. No complete survey of the entire Isthmus has hitherto been made, but it has been ascertained that its surface nowhere exhibits any considerable elevation—the hills for the most part not rising to more than 2000 ft. In some places, indeed, a nearly level plain—covered with a dense forest—extends across from sea to sea. Hence the often-discussed project of a ship-canal, to connect the waters of the two oceans, would not appear to be attended by any insuperable obstacles, in so far as the physical aspect of the region is concerned. Traffic across the isthmus has been greatly facilitated by the recent formation of the Panama railway, about 50 m. in length, between the towns of Aspinwall and Panama—the former on the Atlantic side, the latter at the head of the Gulf of Panama, on the Pacific coast.

Panay, one of the Philippine Islands. The chief commodity for exportation is rice. Iloilo is the chief town.

Paria, Gulf of, an inlet of the Atlantic, on the coast of S. America, near the mouth of the Orinoco river. The north entrance into the gulf is called Boca del Draco [Dragon's Mouth], on account of the adverse currents and tempestuous waves encountered here by Columbus in 1498.

Parilla, or Santa, a town of Peru. Lat. 9.0 S., lon. 78.30 W.

Paris, the metropolis of France, is situated on the river Seine, and, including the suburbs, is about fifteen miles in circumference. In its external aspect, Paris is a splendid city, and contains probably a greater number of striking edifices and localities of public resort than any other European capital. Beside the cathedral of Notre Dame, one of the largest in Europe, Paris has many fine churches and abbeys. The four principal palaces are the Louvre, the Tuilleries, the Palais Royal, and the Luxembourg. In the Louvre is the central museum of the arts, with a choice collection of paintings and statues. Paris is legally divided into 12 arrondissements, each comprising certain quartiers. It is divided, besides, "into quarters as well by its manners as its laws, and these different districts differ as widely one from the other in the ideas, habits, and appearance of their inhabitants, as in the height and size of their buildings, or the width and cleanliness of their streets. The Chausée d'Antin breathes the atmosphere of the Bourse, and the Palais Royal is the district of bankers, stockbrokers, generals of the empire, and rich tradespeople; and it is the quarter fullest of life, most animated, most rife with the spirit of progress, change, luxury, and elegance. How different is the quartier St Germain," &c. Paris, besides being the political capital of France, is one of the chief seats of its industry and commerce; the articles produced being chiefly those of virtù, jewellery, and the fine arts, or such as more immediately minister to the luxurious wants of a great capital. The retail trade of Paris is on a very extensive scale; and its exports have of late years greatly increased. The public libraries, museums, picture-galleries, and literary institutions are numerous and excellent. Paris is the seat of a university; and has, besides, colleges and other educational institutions, conducted on the most liberal scale; and as for theatricals, Paris may properly be regarded as the dramatic capital of Europe. The hospitals and charitable institutions are numerous, and supported by the government. Without the Barriere d'Enfer is the entrance to the Catacombs, which consist of many caverns and excavations that extend several miles in every direction. The principal cavern contains upwards of 2,850,000 skulls, with a proportionable number of the other bones; these are ranged along the various avenues, and so closely packed as to form solid walls; the outer surface consisting of the ends of thigh bones, with skulls so intermixed as to form crosses, squares, waving lines, &c. During the later years of Louis Philippe's reign, Paris was surrounded on all sides with a continuous chain of fortifications. Pop. above 1,800,000.—A town of Kentucky, chief of Bourbon county, U. S.

THE KING GOES AS FAR AS HE CAN, BUT NOT SO FAR AS HE WOULD.

Parma, a former duchy of Italy, comprehended within the present kingdom of Italy. It included the existent provinces of Parma and Piacenza. The soil is fertile in corn, wine, oil, hemp, and pasture; and there are some inconsiderable mines of copper and silver. This duchy anciently formed part of Cisalpine Gaul; Charlemagne gave it to the Holy See: it afterwards fell successively under the dukes of Milan, the Popes, the Farnese family, and the Spaniards. In 1801 Parma was ceded to the French; and in 1814 it was assigned to the Empress Maria Louisa. Pop. 495,800.—The capital is a fortified city of its name, which has a cathedral, a university, and several churches, adorned with paintings by Corregio. The inhabitants trade in silk and silk stockings. Pop. 47,000.

Parnahyba, a trading town of Brazil, prov. Piahy. Lat. 2.50 S., lon. 42.10 W.

Parnassus, a mountain of Greece, famous in poetry and mythology as the favourite resort of Apollo and the Muses. The south side, to a considerable height, is covered with rich vineyards; and several villages, monasteries, and ruins are spread among the cultivated parts. The summit is a plain, with a crater containing a pool of water frozen over. This mountain gives source to several streams, among which is the famous Castalian Spring.

Paro, or Porrogong, a town of Bootan, Hindoostan, with a strong castle; famous for the manufacture of idols, and the forging of swords, daggers, and arrows.

Paros, an island of the Archipelago, one of the Cyclades. This island was anciently dedicated to Bacchus, on account of its excellent wines; and is famous for its quarries of white marble. The famous "Arundelian Chronicle," at Oxford, was brought from this place. This is a chronological account, cut in marble, of the principal events in the history of Greece during the period of 1318 years, from the time of Cecrops to 264 B.C. Parecchia (the ancient Paros) is the cap. of the island.

SUCCESS IS THE CHILD OF CONFIDENCE AND PERSEVERANCE.

are high and well arched, supporting buildings of nine stories high; they are nine in number, three in the south wall, and two in each of the other sides. The middle gate, on the south side, opens into the Tartar, or imperial city, which is surrounded by a wall of large red polished bricks, 20 feet high, and contains the imperial palace and gardens, the public offices, lodgings for the ministers, the eunuchs, artificers, and tradesmen belonging to the court. The streets are amazingly thronged, and to a European it is a curious sight, for not one Chinese female is to be seen among them. All the great streets are guarded by soldiers, who patrol night and day with swords by their sides, and whips in their hands, to chastise those who make any disturbance, or take them into custody. The temples and towers of Peking are so numerous, that it is difficult to count them. Provisions of all kinds are plentiful, they being, as well as the merchandise, brought from all parts by canals from the rivers. Pop. estimated at 2,000,000.

Pelago, an island in the Grecian Archipelago, about eight miles in circuit. Lat. 39.30 N., lon. 24.12 E.

Persia, a large country of Western Asia, consisting of several provinces, which, at different times, have been independent governments. Persia may be considered as an elevated plateau, diversified by rocky mountains, extensive plains, and barren deserts: in the north part it is mountainous and cold; in the middle and south-east parts, sandy and desert; in the south-west, along the shores of the Persian Gulf, level, and extremely fertile, though for several months very hot. The chief rivers are the Kizil-Uzen (or Sefeed-Rood) in the north, with the Kerkhhah and Kuran in the SW. But the arid plateaus of the interior are destitute of perennial streams. Within the watered districts, the soil produces not only pulse and corn, but affords oil in abundance, senna, rhubarb, and the finest drugs; and there are mines of silver, copper, lead, iron, and salt. Here are also dates, pistachio-nuts, and poppies that produce the finest opium; cotton, indigo, and tobacco are raised; and no country can exceed this in the variety of its flowers and flavour of its fruits. The camels, horses, mules, asses, oxen, and buffaloes, are each among the best of their kind, and large flocks of sheep and goats are kept by the wandering tribes. The principal manufactures are satins, taffetas, broads, gold tissues, gold velvet, carpets, calicos, camlets, and fire-arms. The principal trade of Persia is with India, Turkey, Russia, Bokhara, Afghanistan, and of late years also direct with England. The Persians are generally Mohammedans, of the sect of Ali. They are rather inclined to corpulence, have black hair, a high forehead, aquiline nose, full cheeks, and a large chin. The men are strong, robust, and fond of martial exercises; they shave the head, but the beard is held sacred, and almost universally dyed black. The Persians are generally gay, polite, and hospitable; yet are reckoned treacherous and cruel. They are passionately fond of tobacco, which they smoke almost incessantly; but never drink wine before company, though in private they indulge to excess. The females cover the head with a large black turban, over which a Cashmerian shawl is thrown; their robes are rather shorter than those of the men, and fastened in front by large gold buttons. The wives of the rich pass their time in visiting their friends, and amusing themselves; but the bath is the principal scene of their enjoyment and relaxation. Like the Mohammedans, the Persians are restricted to four legitimate wives, but they may have as many concubines as they please. The Persian language is celebrated for its strength, beauty, and melody; and they write it from the right to the left with great expedition. The pop. of Persia is estimated at between 9 and 10 millions.

Persian Gulf, an arm of the Indian Ocean, between Persia and Arabia. Owing to the number of small islands, and the extent of its reefs, the navigation of this sea is in most parts difficult and tedious.

Perth Amboy, a city and sea-port of New Jersey, United States. Pop. 1300.

Perthes, a town in the dep. of Seine-et-

Marne, and another in Upper Marne, France.

Perthshire, one of the largest and most important counties of Scotland, 76 miles long and 68 broad, divided into 68 parishes. The country exhibits scenes of rugged and striking magnificence, contrasted with the most beautiful marks of cultivation. The Grampian Mountains cross it from south-west to north-east. "Its lakes and rivers are also on a grand and varied scale; and its climate is as different as its surface, being severe in the more elevated, and mild and early in the lower districts. The contrast in the inhabitants is equally great; the Celt being found on the mountains and the Saxon on the plains, and each differing from the other in language, dress, and manners." The principal rivers are the Forth and Tay. Total pop. 127,741.

Perth, the capital of the above county, was once the residence of the sovereigns of Scotland. In this borough the reformed religion was first publicly avowed, after John Knox had preached a sermon against idolatry. Perth has extensive manufactures of linen and cotton goods, particularly ginghams for umbrellas, imitation India shawls, and handkerchiefs; there are also several tanneries, breweries, corn and flax mills; and the salmon-fishery is a great source of trade. Pop. 25,580. — The cap. of Western Australia, situated on the Swan River, a few miles above its mouth.

Pertuis, a town of France, in the department of Vaucluse, near the Durance.

Peru, a republic of S. America, formerly the richest and most extensive kingdom in that country, and long celebrated for its gold and silver mines, from which immense wealth has been drawn. Its extreme length is about 1500 miles, the breadth varying from 40 to 600. It is remarkable for the lofty and magnificent mountain-ranges of the Andes, parts of which are covered with all but interminable forests, while other parts are clothed with short fine grass, and the valleys, which are very extensive, enjoy all the advantages of the best climates of the temperate zone. Peru, however, is more subject, perhaps, than any other country, to the tremendous visitation of earthquakes. The lama is native to this country, and its wool furnishes the Peruvians with clothing. Peru is inhabited by the Spaniards, the native Indians, and a mixture arising from both, called Mestizos. When the Spaniards first landed in Peru, they found it governed by sovereigns called Incas, who were looked up to by their subjects with awe and veneration; and the inhabitants were distinguished for their mild and polished manners. But the avarice of their European conquerors led to scenes of blood and desolation, and the Peruvians became the victims of the most unheard-of cruelties. The present pop. of Peru numbers 2,500,000, the larger proportion of whom are of mixed Indian and white origin. The cap. is Lima.

Petersburg, or St Petersburg, the metropolis of the empire of Russia, in a gov. of the same name, with a university. It is seated on the Neva, near the Gulf of Finland, and built partly on some islands formed by the river, and partly upon the continent. It owes its existence to the genius of Peter the Great, who first began the city by the erection of a citadel with six bastions, in 1703, and in less than nine years the seat of empire was transferred to it from Moscow. The river Neva, by which the city is intersected, is deep, clear, and rapid; and the main stream is broader than the Thames at London. In several parts wooden houses, scarcely superior to common cottages, are blended with the public buildings; but the mansions of the nobility are vast piles of building, furnished in the most elegant style, and the public edifices are magnificent. Among the ornaments of Petersburg is an equestrian statue of Peter the Great, in bronze, of colossal size; the pedestal of which is a gigantic block of rough granite. There is also a splendid column erected in honour of the emperor Alexander, 150 ft in height; the pedestal is of granite and bronze; the shaft of the column consists of a single piece of red granite, 84 ft in length, and 14 ft in diameter. Within the walls of the citadel is the church of St Peter, in which are deposited the remains of several of the sovereigns, but the principal church is that of the Holy Virgin of Kasan, named after the province of Kasan, the first in the empire that embraced Christianity. There are upwards of 40 other churches, appropriated to the national religion and those of different sects, which are tolerated without any restrictions. Petersburg has a considerable trade in exporting the products of the empire, and also a communication by canals and rivers with many of the southern provinces as far as Astrakhan, on the borders of the Caspian Sea. Pop. 674,000.

Petersburg, a town of New Hampshire, U. S.—Another in Pennsylvania.—Another in Virginia, with a great trade in tobacco and flour. Pop. 14,600.—Another in the state of Georgia, America.

Plasencia, a fortified city of Spain, in Estremadura, standing on a fertile plain surrounded on the N. and E. by high mountains. Pop. 6000.

Plassey, a village of Hindoostan, on the Hooghly river. It was here, on the 23rd of June, 1757, that Clive obtained a most splendid victory over Suraja Dowlah, soubahdar of Bengal. Clive's army consisted of only 3100 men; Suraja Dowlah had 50,000 foot, 18,000 horse, and a large train of artillery. This victory gave the English possession of Bengal, and was the first great step towards the preponderance of British power in India.

Plata, a town of New Granada, S. America, 55 m. E. of Popayan.

Plata, La (United Provinces of), or Argentine Republic, a confederation of states in South America, originally embracing 15 distinct provinces. Two of the number, however, — Paraguay and Uruguay, — subsequently separated themselves from the union, of which Buenos Ayres is the present head. This country was first discovered in 1517, and settled by the Spaniards in 1553. It was long dependent on Peru; but, in 1778, was erected into a viceroyalty. In 1806 the English made an unsuccessful attempt to establish themselves in Buenos Ayres; in 1810 the revolutionary movements began; and in 1816 the united provinces threw off their dependence on Spain, and the federal capital was transferred to Buenos Ayres. Since that time La Plata has been several times involved in disputes with Brazil, France, and Bolivia; so that its prosperity has been retarded; but the natural resources are great, and there is every prospect of its becoming a flourishing country. The greater part of La Plata is a level plain; vegetation is very rapid; cattle, horses, and mules are reared in prodigious numbers; and the vegetable products include both those of Southern Europe and the tropical climes.

Plata, or Rio de la Plata, a great river of South America, formed by the union of the rivers Parana and Uruguay. It was first discovered, in 1514, by a Spanish navigator, who was slain by the natives in endeavouring to make a descent in the country. In 1526 it was visited by Sebastian Cabot, then in the Spanish service, who landed and built a fort; and, having procured much silver from the natives, he supposed that mines existed in the country; and accordingly gave the name of Rio de la Plata [River of Silver] to the great stream he had sailed up.

Platte, a river of the United States, which rises in the Rocky Mountains, and joins the Missouri, after a course of 1200 m.

Ploen, a town of Prussian Germany, prov. Schleswig-Holstein, with a castle.

Plymouth, a bor. and sea-port in Devonshire, seated at the mouth of the Plym, and, next to Portsmouth, the most considerable naval port in England for men-of-war. Here are three harbours, Catwater, Sutton Pool, and Hamoaze. These unite in a capacious bay, called the Sound; and their entrances are defended by a fort on St Nicholas Island, by a citadel nearly opposite to that island, upon a hill which overlooks the town, and by several batteries and blockhouses on different points of the harbour. Plymouth is well supplied with fresh water, and carries on a considerable foreign and domestic trade. Pop. 68,758.—A sea-port of Massachusetts, U. S., capital of a county. It is the oldest settlement in New England; and the principal business of the place is the cod fishery. Pop. 6000.—A town of New Hampshire.—A town of North Carolina, capital of Washington county.

Pola, a decayed sea-port town of the Austrian empire, gov. Trieste, at the bottom of the bay of Istria, having an excellent harbour. In ancient times it was a splendid place, as is attested by the noble amphitheatre and other existing remains of its former grandeur.

Poland, formerly an independent and extensive country of Europe; but the existing kingdom, or rather province, of Poland, now an integral part of Russia, is of comparatively limited dimensions. After many ineffectual struggles on the part of the Poles to maintain their independence, against the aggrandizing views of Prussia, Russia, and Austria, who had severally planned its conquest from the year 1772, Poland was at length, in 1798, divided among its enemies: Austria had a part of Little Poland, and the greater part of Red Russia, which is now the kingdom of Galicia; Prussia had Great Poland, Polish Prussia, a small part of Lithuania, and Podlachia; and Russia had Samogitia, the remainder of Lithuania, Volhinia, and Podolia. In 1794 the Poles rose in rebellion under Kosciusko, who, after displaying prodigies of valour, was defeated and taken prisoner; and a dismemberment of the remaining territories thereupon took place. The present kingdom of Poland originated in the grand duchy of Warsaw, established by Napoleon in 1807. It was assigned to Russia by the Congress of Vienna, and obtained from the emperor Alexander a representative constitution. In 1830, however, the Poles again raised their national standard, and made the most heroic efforts to re-establish their former independence; but in this they eventually failed, and the arrangements made at the congress of Vienna were again confirmed. The Poles are a remarkably fine race of people, and their fate has deserved the commiseration of the friends of liberty in every part of the globe, while the iniquitous treatment they have experienced at the hands of the despotic sovereignties of continental Europe will always meet with the indignant denunciation of the historian.

Poltava. See Pultowa.

Polynesia, the name applied by modern geographers to the circuit that includes those numerous islands in the Pacific Ocean extending eastward from the Philippine Islands and New Guinea to the coast of America. The whole of Polynesia may be considered as a series of submarine mountain ranges, and in many of them are distinct traces of volcanic action: a large number of the islands, however (including nearly all those of smaller size), are of coral formation. The Polynesian islands afford an extremely diversified vegetation; and among the many plants covering their surface are some of high utility for human support, especially the bread-fruit tree, the cocoa-nut, the banana, plantain, and sugar-cane. The habits of the natives are gross and sensual; in some of the islands cannibalism still exists, and the practice of tattooing the body prevails more or less in all of them.

Polzin, a town of Pomerania, near which are medicinal springs and baths.

Pombal, a town in Estremadura, Portugal. Pop. 3600.

Pompeii, an ancient city of Italy, destroyed by an eruption of Vesuvius A. D. 79. Though not buried so deep under ashes and lava as Herculaneum, which was overwhelmed at the same time, it remained hidden till 1750, when it was discovered by some peasants digging in a vineyard near the river Sarno; since when, temples, theatres, shops, and houses, with paintings, statues, arms, utensils, &c., have been found, and the ground-plan of the entire city exposed to view. The impression it gives of the actual presence of a Roman town, in all the circumstantial reality of its existence 2000 years ago, is so vivid and intense, that it requires but a small effort of imagination on the part of the visitor to place himself among the multitudes which once thronged its streets and theatres, and occupied its now voiceless chambers.

Portugal, a kingdom situate at the most western point of Europe, and divided into the provinces of Estremadura, Beira, Entre Douro e Minho, Tras-os-Montes, Alemtejo, and Algarve. The agricultural capabilities of this fine country are equal to any part of Europe; but they remain in great measure undeveloped. Corn is not plentiful, for little attention is paid to husbandry; and maize, imported from Africa, is used by the peasants instead of wheat; but there is abundance of olives, vines, oranges, lemons, nuts, almonds, figs, and raisins; and it is famous for excellent wines. The foreign trade consists in sugar, tobacco, rum, cotton, indigo, hides, Brazil and other woods for dyeing, and many excellent drugs. There are mines of iron, copper, tin, and lead, quarries of marble, and some precious stones.

Prussia, an important European kingdom, the head of the German Empire, as established in 1871. The Prussian monarchy, which dates its existence as a kingdom from the beginning of the 18th century, has in virtue of recent events become not merely the foremost power of Germany, but first among the dominant military states of Europe. Its present place is mainly the result, first, of the Austro-Prussian war of 1866; and, secondly, of the Franco-German war of 1870-71. The former involved the absorption within its territory of Schleswig-Holstein, Hanover, Nassau, Hessen-Cassel, and Frankfort-on-the-Main—all of them (with the exception of Schleswig) members of the then Germanic Confederation—thereby giving compactness to a territory which was previously irregular in outline, besides adding considerably to its area. Prussia now embraces nearly the whole of North Germany, from the Baltic and North Seas to the line of the river Main and the Erz Gebirge. Besides the Rhine, the Vistula, the Elbe, and the Oder, Prussia is watered by the Pregel, Niemen, Ems, Moselle, Spree, &c. There are also numerous lakes, and several large lagoons, communicating with the sea by narrow mouths. The country produces a great deal of timber, flax, hemp, tobacco, and corn; iron, silver, copper, lead, and coal are among its mineral products, and amber is found on the seacoast. The domestic animals are numerous; besides the common game, there are elk, wild asses, and bison in the forests. The inhabitants are industrious, robust, and good soldiers. The obligation of military service is universal, every man being obliged to enter the army of the line, or the landwehr, between the ages of 20 and 32, and to serve in the one or the other for three years: in case of invasion the landsturm, or levy en masse, is called out. The Lutheran religion is the most prevalent, but all religious sects enjoy liberty of conscience. The chief manufactures are glass, iron, copper, brass, gunpowder, porcelain, jewellery, watches, paper, cloth, linen, and stockings. Pop. 24,693,000.

Prussia (Prope), an extensive province of the Prussian dominions; formerly divided into the provinces of East or Ducal Prussia, and West Prussia. The principal towns are Königsberg, Dantzic, Elbing, Tilsit, Marienwerder, &c. Pop. 3,137,000.

Rhine, one of the largest rivers on the continent of Europe. It rises in Switzerland, in the canton of Grisons, and is formed of three streams, distinguished as the Further, Middle, and Hither (or Upper) Rhine. The first two torrents united are called the Lower Rhine, which receives the Upper Rhine at Richenau; and the height is here about 6180 feet above the sea. It was the ancient boundary of Gaul and Germany, and is still the natural barrier of modern Germany and France. In its course towards the Zuyder Zee it branches into four streams, and that which retains the name of the Rhine flows towards Leyden, and enters the sea by a sluice at the village of Catwyk. The scenery of the Rhine is justly admired by travellers, particularly between Mayence and Coblenz. In a commercial point of view the Rhine is perhaps the most important river in Europe, owing to the numerous states to which it affords a water conveyance, and the great facilities given to its free navigation.

Rome, a city of Italy, long the renowned "Mistress of the World," situate in the Campagna di Roma, formerly the capital of the Ecclesiastical States, and now of the kingdom of Italy. It is built on seven hills and the intermediate valleys, along the banks of the Tiber, over which it has four bridges. Some of the principal streets are of considerable length and perfectly straight, in which are splendid palaces and houses belonging to the nobility; there are also many piazzas, which are adorned with noble fountains or obelisks. But the generality of the streets are mean-looking, and the houses have a dilapidated appearance; in short, the stranger's attention is continually divided between what is grand and what is filthy. The church of St Peter, which was finished in 1621, is entirely covered, both within and without, with marble. The length is 730 feet, the breadth 520, and the height, from the pavement to the top of the cross that crowns the cupola, 450. The Pantheon, erected above 120 years before the Christian era, to the honour of all the gods, is the most perfect of the Roman temples that now remain; but the Colosseum is the most stupendous monument of antiquity. The Pope has three superb palaces, of which the principal is the Vatican, near St Peter's Church: the library of this palace is deemed the largest and richest in the world. Besides the university, which consists of several colleges, there are numerous academies, literary societies, &c. Pop. 244,000. A town of New York,

Russia, an extensive empire, partly in Asia, and partly in Europe, besides a large tract in the NW. part of America. It includes, in fact, nearly one-seventh part of the land on the terrestrial globe. Russia in Europe alone embraces 2,000,000 sq. miles, or more than half the European continent. The principal rivers are the Dnieper, Volga, Don, and Dwina, which, owing to the flatness of the country, afford great facilities to internal navigation. The lakes are numerous, and, like the rivers, are upon a large scale. The climate exhibits great extremes of heat and cold, the winter being in general very severe. Russia has valuable mines of gold, platinum, iron, &c. There are manufactures of leather, linen, woollen-stuffs, velvet, and silk; brass, iron, steel, and tin are also wrought. The home commodities are sables, black furs, the skins of foxes, ermines, hyenas, lynxes, bears, panthers, wolves, martens, white hares, &c.; iron, tallow, wax, honey, corn, potash, tar, linseed and train oil, castor, isinglass, hemp, flax, thread, Siberian musk, soap, feathers, timber, &c. To these may be added the merchandise of China, India, Persia, Turkey, and some European countries. The established religion is that of the Greek Church. The language is an improved version of the Slavonian; and the letters of the alphabet have a great resemblance to the Greek characters. The Russians, in general, are robust, well-shaped, and of pretty good complexion. The sovereign of Russia is absolute and despotic in the fullest sense of those terms. The first who bore the title of czar was Basil, son of Basilides, who freed his country from its subjection to the Tartars, about the year 1470. The title of emperor was first assumed by Peter I., who, by his actions, justly acquired the surname of Great, and finished his glorious career in the year 1725. From this period Russia has progressively advanced in arts, arms, and civilization. Pop. of European Russia, 71,000,000. See Siberia.

Samos, an island of the Ægean Sea, belonging to Turkey, on the coast of Anatolia. In ancient times Samos filled a conspicuous place in history. She was one of the most powerful of the states belonging to the Ionian confederacy; and was able, by means of her naval power, to maintain her independence after Cræsus and Cyrus had reduced the continental states of Ionia. Samos was for a time the head quarters of Antony and Cleopatra, who held their court here in all the pomp of Asiatic splendour. It afterwards became subject to the Greek emperors; and, at length, in the 16th century, passed under Turkish sway. Among the many illustrious individuals of Samian birth, one of the most noted is Pythagoras. Although now in a neglected condition, Samos still produces excellent crops of grain, with fruit, silk, cotton, &c.

Sardinia (Kingdom of), a former state of Southern Europe, the nucleus of the present kingdom of Italy. The kingdom of Sardinia comprehended the territory of Piedmont, Genoa, Nice, and the duchy of Savoy, with the island of Sardinia. It was the only one of the Italian States in which constitutional freedom prevailed, in which industry flourished, in which the people were contented and happy; and it exhibited in all respects a marked contrast to other portions of that beautiful but long misgoverned country. The substitution, for the title and possessions of the Sardinian monarchy, of those of the present Italian kingdom resulted—happily for the cause of freedom—from the Franco-Sardinian and Austrian war of 1859-60, and the revolutionary outbreaks by which it was followed. See Italy.

Sardinia, an island in the Mediterranean, separated from Corsica by the Strait of Bonifacio. Next to Sicily it is the largest island in the Mediterranean. The chief part of the country is waste, but, where cultivated, it is fertile in corn, wine, oranges, citrons, and olives. Here are also mines of silver, lead, sulphur, and alum; and quantities of cheese and salt are made. Pop. 588,000.

Saxony (Kingdom of), a state of Central Europe, and of Eastern Germany; in length about 140 miles, and at its greatest breadth 90 miles. It is divided into the circles of Dresden, Leipsic, Zwickau, and Bautzen. The climate is mild, the land well cultivated, and considerable quantities of fruit are grown. Its breeds of sheep are among the finest in Europe, and large quantities of wool are exported thence. Vast herds of cattle are also bred. In mineral riches few countries equal it; mining is, consequently, one of the principal occupations of the inhabitants. Silver, iron, lead, bismuth, arsenic, antimony, and manganese are the principal metals; serpentine marble and fine building stone are abundant, as are also various gems; and the neighbourhood of Meissen yields the fine porcelain clay of which the Dresden china is made. The weaving of cotton and linen is an important branch of manufacturing industry, and great advances have of late been made in yarn and woollen fabrics. The government is an hereditary and limited monarchy. Saxony was only an electorate till 1806, when Napoleon erected it into a kingdom; and, as the king remained a firm ally of the French emperor, the latter made extensive additions to his dominions. Not until after the battle of Leipsic did he abandon his old and powerful benefactor; and it was only owing to the opposition which the emperor of Austria gave to the plan of dismembering Saxony, that it now exists as a separate state: as it was, some of its most valuable provinces were assigned to Prussia. Pop. 2,337,000.

Saxony, a prov. of the Prussian states, consisting of the Saxon states formerly belonging to Prussia, together with the territories taken from the kingdom of Saxony by the allied powers in 1815. The rocks of Scilly have been fatal to many ships entering the English Channel. One of the most disastrous events of this kind happened in 1707, when three men-of-war perished, with Admiral Sir Cloudesley Shovel, and all their crews. These islands are generally supposed to be the Cassiterides, or tin islands, of the ancients, though there is now no trace of tin, nor of mines of any sort. Sea-fowl are found in great numbers. Pop. 2600.

Scio, or Chio, a delightful island of the Archipelago, belonging to the Turks, near the coast of Anatolia. The wine of Scio, so celebrated by the ancients, is still in great esteem; but the island is now principally distinguished by the profitable culture of mastic, and has some trade in silk, cotton, and figs. — The cap. of this island is a sea-port of the same name, and is the best-built town in the Archipelago. It has an excellent harbour, and 14,500 inhabitants.

Scioto, a river of the State of Ohio, which rises near the source of the Sandusky, and flows to Portsmouth, where it enters the Ohio.

Scituate, a town of Massachusetts, U. S. Pop. 2100. — Another in Rhode Island, U. S. Pop. 4500.

Slavonia, or Slavonia, a territory belonging to Austria; lying between the rivers Drave and Danube on the north, and the Save on the south. It is a fertile level country, and in ancient times was of vast extent. The language of Slavonia is the mother of four others — Hungary, Bohemia, Poland, and Russia. Pop. (with Austrian Croatia, to which it is now united) 967,000.

Scone, or Scoon, a village of Scotland, near Perth. Here is a noted palace, on the site of a more ancient one, where the kings of Scotland used to be crowned, on a celebrated stone, which is now removed to London.

Scopia, or Uskub, a town of Turkey, in Macedonia, celebrated for the manufacture of Morocco leather. Lat. 41.54 N., lon. 21.39 E. Pop. about 10,000.

Scotland, the northern portion of the Island of Great Britain, and forming one of the three great divisions of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland. It is bounded on the north by the North Sea, east by the German Ocean, south by England and the Irish Sea, and west by the Atlantic Ocean. To Scotland also appertain the islands on its west coast, called the Hebrides, or Western Islands, and those to the north-east, called the Orkney and Shetland Islands. From north to south it extends 270 miles, and the greatest breadth is 150, but in some places not above 30; and no part is distant above 40 miles from the coast. It contains 29,167 square miles, and is divided into 33 counties. Scotland is naturally divided into the Highlands and the Lowlands; the former name is applied to the mountainous part to the north and north-west of the Grampian Hills, and the latter to the more level district on the east and south-east. The coasts of Scotland are bold and rocky; and they are generally much indented by arms of the sea, termed firths and lochs, which extend far inland, and are of considerable importance in a commercial point of view. The principal rivers are the Spey, Don, Tay, Tweed, Clyde, Forth, Northern Dee, Esk, Annan, Nith, and Southern Dee; many of which teem with the finest salmon, trout, and other fish. The lochs, or freshwater lakes, are numerous, and some of them extensive. The climate is very various. The northern extremity is cold; but, from its insular situation, the frosts are far from being so intense as in parts of the continent no further to the north. The products of the country are grain, flax, woods of oak and fir, coal, lead, iron, freestone, limestone, slate, the most beautiful marble, fine rock-crystals, pearls, variegated pebbles, &c. It feeds vast herds of cattle and flocks of sheep. In agriculture, as in manufactures, Scotland has of late years made a rapid progress, and the condition of the inhabitants has improved immensely during the present century. The established religion is the Presbyterian. Pop. (in 1871), 3,358,613.

Shirvan, a district of Asiatic Russia, forming part of the Transcaucasian territory of Russia. It lies to the eastward of Georgia, and extends to the shores of the Caspian Sea. Shirvan includes the lower portion of the Kour valley,—for the most part a fertile and watered plain. The chief town is Baku, upon the shore of the Caspian Sea.

Shoa, a kingdom of Africa, forming the SE. portion of Abyssinia, and constituting one of the independent states into which that country is now divided. Shoa embraces a series of rocky plateaux, intersected by deep and narrow valleys, with precipitous sides. These valleys are luxuriantly wooded, and—as well as the lower declivities of the mountains—possess an extremely fertile soil. The most considerable river is the Hawash, which flows along the eastern border of the kingdom. The inhabitants of Shoa are nominally followers of the Christian religion, but their mode of life is coarse and barbarous, and many of their habits of the most revolting description. The common practice of eating raw flesh, while yet warm and quivering with life, may be mentioned as an example. Some amount of trade is carried on with the neighbouring countries, grain and a coarse cotton cloth (the latter manufactured on every farm) being the chief articles of export. Coffee, gold-dust, ivory, gums and spices, and ostrich-feathers, with other characteristic productions of the adjacent regions of Africa, are also supplied by the traders of Shoa to the merchants who frequent the ports of Zeyla and Berbera, on the shores of the Gulf of Aden. The greater part of the population are devoted to agricultural pursuits, but large numbers are accustomed to the use of arms, and Shoa has been the frequent theatre of conflict with the savage Galla tribes who dwell in the vicinity. The Christian population of Shoa is estimated as a million, to which may be added 1,500,000 dependent tribes, either Mohammedan or Pagan.

Shoreham, a bor. in Sussex, commonly called New Shoreham, to distinguish it

Siam, a large kingdom of Asia, situated in the Indo-Chinese peninsula. It is a flat country, and in the rainy season is overflowed by the river. There are mines of gold, silver, iron, lead, tin, and copper, and plenty of pepper, rice, cotton, aloes, eagle-wood, and musk. The woods abound with elephants, rhinoceroses, leopards, and tigers; beside which, there are crocodiles and large serpents. The Siamese, both men and women, go almost naked, having only a piece of calico or silk girded round their waists; but the better sort wear rich garments. The men are of an olive colour, with little beard; but the women are of a straw complexion. They have been said to excel in the fabrication of gold, in fireworks, and in miniature-painting; but in mechanical ingenuity they are decidedly inferior to the natives of China and Cochin-China. The religion and language of the Siamese resembles that of the Burmese; and their temples and priests are very numerous. The pop. is supposed to number six millions. The capital is Bang-kok.

Sias, a river of European Russia, which falls into Lake Ladoga, on its southern shore.

Siberia, a country of Asia, comprehending the principal Asiatic part of the Russian empire. It extends 3500 miles from east to west, and 1200 from north to south, embracing above a fourth part of the Asiatic continent. The south portion of Siberia is fertile, but the north and east parts are extremely cold, presenting vast marshy plains, covered with almost perpetual snow, and traversed by enormous rivers, which pursue their course to the Arctic Ocean. The principal riches of Siberia consist in fine skins and furs, and mines of gold, silver, iron, lead, and copper. Several kinds of precious stones are found here, particularly topazes, of fine lustre; it also affords magnets of an extraordinary size. The inhabitants are of three sorts: the natives of the country, Tartars, and Russians. The native Siberians dwell in under-ground huts in the winter, and in the summer on the banks of rivers. Their garments are the skins of wild beasts, and their riches consist in bows, arrows, a knife, and a kettle. Siberia is the place to which criminals, as well as persons under the displeasure of the court, are commonly banished from Russia. Through this vast tract the Russian caravans every year carry their merchandise to China. Pop. 4,000,000.

Sicily, the largest and most important island in the Mediterranean, separated from Calabria, in Italy, by a narrow channel, called the Strait of Messina, has the title of a kingdom, and is divided into seven provinces. The two kingdoms of Naples and Sicily are under one government, and the productions of the two countries are nearly the same. Sicily is famous for horses and mules; and the cattle are strong and compact, with particularly large horns. There are snakes of a great size in the forests; asps and scorpions, whose venom is very active; and harmless lizards, of a beautiful green colour. In this island is the celebrated volcano called Etna. Pop. 2,392,000.

Sinde, a province of British India, about 350 miles in length, extending along both banks of the Indus, from its mouth to the frontiers of Mooltan. The inhabitants are principally Mohammedans, but there are a considerable number of Hindoos. Prior to 1843, when the arms of Sir Charles Napier brought the province under British rule, Sinde was despotically governed by native chieftains called Aneers. The condition of its inhabitants has been in all respects greatly ameliorated during the subsequent period of British sway, and the productive resources of the province greatly increased. It is only in the parts immediately watered by the Indus, however, that the soil of Sinde is fertile: elsewhere the country is arid and sandy. Rice is the staple produce. Indigo, sugar, tobacco, and hemp, are also raised. The chief towns are Hyderabad, Tattah, Shikarpore, and Kurrahee.

In 1833, however, a new arrangement was made, according to which Spain is divided into 49 provinces—the Canary and Balearic Islands constituting two of the number. The soil of Spain is fertile; but there are large tracts of uncultivated ground. The produce of the country is wheat, barley, saffron, honey, silk, salt, saltpetre, barilla, hemp, and sugar-canes, with the richest and most delicious fruits that are to be found in France and Italy; and its wines are in high esteem. Spain abounds in minerals and metals; cornelian, agate, jacinth, loadstone, turquoise-stones, quicksilver, iron, copper, lead, sulphur, gypsum, calamine, crystal, marbles of several kinds, porphyry, jasper, emeralds, and amethysts, are found. The principal rivers are the Douro, Tajo, Guadiana, Guadalquivir, Ebro, and Minho. The Spaniards in general are tall, their complexions swarthy, and their countenances expressive. Pride, often combined with indolence, forms an ingredient inherent in the Spanish character. Warm in their attachments, but bitter in their anger; firm in bodily suffering, yet vindictive in their revenge, there are few people so attractive in the friendly intercourse of society; while the beauty of the women, and the air of romance which they throw over every action, render their company as agreeable as it confessedly is dangerous. The bull-fight is the national game of Spain, and the passionate love of this spectacle almost exceeds belief. The established religion is Catholic. Madrid is the capital. In 1808 Napoleon attempted, by treachery and force, to subjugate this country; this led to the Peninsular war, in which the British took so large a share, and which was carried on until 1813, when the allied forces crossed the Bidassoa, and entered France. In the following year Ferdinand was restored. But the subsequent political condition of Spain has been disturbed, and frequent revolutionary movements have taken place. Pop. (in 1867) 16,374,000.

Sumatra, an island in the Indian Ocean, the most western of the Eastern Archipelago. It is 950 miles long, and from 150 to 200 broad. The equator divides it into almost equal parts. A chain of mountains runs through its whole extent; and between the ridges there are extensive plains, considerably elevated above the surface of the maritime lands. The inhabitants consist of Malays, Achenese, Battas, Lampongs, and Rejangs. The aboriginal tribes are mostly Pagans, but the bulk of the population are followers of the Mohammedan worship. The wild beasts of Sumatra are tigers, elephants, rhinoceroses, bears, orang-outangs, and monkeys. Storks of a prodigious size, parrots, and many small birds of beautiful plumage, are also natives here, and the island swarms with insects. Rice is the chief grain. There are sugar-canes, yams, bananas, and most of the East-India fruits, in great perfection. Indigo, saltpetre, sulphur, arsenic, brazil-wood, the bread-fruit tree, pepper, cassia, camphor, benzoin, coffee, cotton, cabbage-tree, and silk cotton-tree, are the produce of Sumatra; and the forests contain many valuable species of wood. Tin, iron, copper, and lead, are found; but the mines are not worked so as to render them productive. Gold dust is brought from the interior to the sea-coast, where it is bartered for iron tools and other articles of European manufacture. Among the vegetable products the most important is pepper, the quantity supplied by this island being, in fact, more than all the rest in the world. Sumatra is divided into many petty kingdoms, the chief of which are Acheen, Indrapore, Palenbang, and Janbi. The Dutch possess some settlements on the western coasts, amongst which are Benecoolen and Fort Marlborough. Pop. estimated at 2,500,000.

Switzerland (anc. Helvetia), a country of Europe, 220 miles long and 130 broad, embracing an area of 15,261 English square miles. It is divided from Italy, on the south, by the Alps; from Germany, on the north and east, by the course of the river Rhine; and from France, on the west, by the range of the Jura. Switzerland is divided into 22 cantons, each canton having its distinct internal government; and the general government of the country is by a diet, composed of a member from each canton. The principal lakes are those of Constance, Geneva, Lucerne, Zurich, and Neufchatel; and the most considerable rivers are the Rhine, Rhone, Aar, Reuss, and Limmat. The chief riches of this country consist of excellent pastures, in which many cattle are bred; goats and chamois feed on the mountains. Among the wild animals of Switzerland are the bear, wolf, lynx, wild boar, chamois, ibex, deer, game of all kinds, the marmot, ermine, &c.; the vegetable products include nearly all that are found in the middle parts of Europe. The Swiss are strong and robust, for which reason they are preferred by several nations for the military service. The women are tolerably handsome, have many good qualities, and are in general very industrious. Simplicity of manners, peculiar cleanliness, unaffected frankness, and love of freedom, are their most distinguishing characteristics. The inhabitants of some cantons are almost wholly Catholics, others are Calvinists, and some are nearly equal of both religions living together in amity. Pop. (in 1870) 2,669,000.

Thames, the principal river in Britain, and, in a commercial point of view, among the most important rivers in the world. Its two sources, the Churn and Isis, are in Gloucestershire, and form their junction near Cricklade, Wilts, where it receives several rivulets, which cause it to widen considerably in its course to Lechlade; and, being there joined by the Coln and Lech, at the distance of 138 miles from London, it becomes navigable for vessels of 50 tons. At Oxford it is joined by the Cherwell; at Abingdon, by the Ock; and at Dorchester, by the Thame. Passing by Wallingford to Reading, it there receives the Kennet; and thence proceeds by Henley, Marlow, Maidenhead, Windsor, Staines, Chertsey, Kingston, and Brentford, in its course to London; during which it receives the Loddon, Coln, Wey, Mole, Brent, and Wandle. From London the river proceeds by Greenwich, Woolwich, and Gravesend, to the German Ocean, in which course it parts Essex from Kent, and receives the Lea, Roding, and Darent. A communication is effected between this river and the Severn, by a canal from Lechlade to Stroud; also, with the Trent and the Mersey, by a canal from Oxford to Coventry. The well-known lines of Denham, in his poem of Cooper's Hill, very accurately and happily describe this noble river:—

“Though deep, yet clear; though gentle, yet not dull; Strong without rage; without o’erflowing, full.”

The surface exhibits a vast table-land, elevated upwards of 10,000 ft above the sea, and reaching in some parts 15,000 ft in altitude. Thibet is politically divided into Wei and Tsang, or Hither and Farther Thibet, the former being that part bordering on China. The principal river is the Sanpoo; and it has several lakes. Here are many beasts of prey, and great abundance and variety of wild fowl and game; with numerous flocks of sheep and goats, and herds of cattle. The principal exports are gold, gold-dust, diamonds, pearls, lamb-skins, goats' hair, shawls, woollen cloths, rock-salt, musk, and tincal or crude borax. The Tibetians are governed by the grand lama, or high priest of the Buddhist faith, who is not only submitted to and adored by them, but is absolutely regarded as the Deity himself. Even the Emperor of China, who is of a Tartar race, does not fail to acknowledge the grand lama in his religious capacity, although, as a temporal sovereign, the lama himself is tributary to that emperor. The Tibetians preserve entire the mortal remains of their sovereign lamas only; every other corpse is either consumed by fire, or exposed to be the promiscuous food of beasts and birds of prey. The chief city is Lassa.

Tunbridge, or Tonbridge, a market-town in Kent, on the Medway. Here are the ruins of a large castle, erected in the 11th century. The town possesses an excellent and liberally endowed grammar-school, founded in 1554, by Sir Andrew Judd, a native of the town (and Lord Mayor of London in 1551), and under the government of the Skinners' company. In the vicinity is a manufacture of gunpowder. Pop. 8209.

Tunbridge Wells, a favourite watering-place, situated chiefly in Tunbridge parish, but partly in the parishes of Speldhurst and Frant, in Sussex; being about 5½ miles south of the town of Tunbridge. It has long been resorted to on account of its chalybeate waters, discovered in 1606 by Dudley Lord North, who is said to have recovered from a deep consumption by drinking them. The Wells are situated in the centre of the town. Pop. 19,410.

Tunis, a country of Barbary, 200 miles from north to south, and 120 from east to west. It is under the rule of a bey, who acknowledges the nominal sovereignty of Turkey. The chief productions are wheat, barley, oil, wool, wax, tallow, and a variety of fruits. The mountains near Tunis abound in silver, copper, and lead. In the woods and mountains are lions, ostriches, monkeys, roebucks, hares, pheasants, partridges, and other sorts of birds and beasts. The inhabitants are a mixture of Moors, Turks, Arabs, Jews, and Christians, merchants and slaves; and they carry on a great trade in linen and woollen cloth, Morocco leather, gold-dust, lead, horses, oil, scap, and ostrich eggs and feathers. The established religion is Mohammedanism. Pop. 2,500,000.—The city of Tunis, the capital of the above territory, is five miles in circuit, with a lofty wall, and has five gates and 35 mosques. The Mohammedans here have nine colleges for students, and a great number of smaller schools. Pop. 130,000.

Turin has a royal palace, a cathedral, a university, and other handsome buildings. The citadel is one of the strongest in Europe, comprising an arsenal, a cannon foundry, a chymical laboratory, &c. Near the city is the castle of Valentin, the garden of which is applied to botanical studies. Pop. 180,000.

Turinsk, a town in Tobolsk, Asiatic Russia. Lat. 58.5 N., lon. 63.44 E.

Turkestan, an inland country of Asia, embracing the tract lying to the eastward of the Caspian Sea and around the shores of Lake Aral. Its inhabitants, the Turcomans, differ in religion from the Persians, who deem them infidels. They live in tribes, being subject to no particular governor; but each tribe chooses a nominal chief, who has no further authority among them than that of settling differences and arranging their civil economy. Their general characteristics are those common to all wandering nations: great hospitality within their own boundaries, and universal depredation abroad. Their horses are bought by the neighbouring nations at vast prices, which, with the sale among other tribes of their captives, and of their camels, sheep, &c., form the chief source of a Turcoman's wealth. The people live on corn, the flesh of horses, camels, and sheep, and the milk of mares and camels. They excavate a large hole in the ground, in which they make a fire; and, placing the meat in the embers cover it up until it be baked. Turkestan is divided into several khanats, the principal of which were Khiva, Bokhara, and Khokan: the first and last named now under Russian power.

Turkey, a large empire, extending over part of Europe, Asia, and Africa. Turkey in Europe contains Moldavia, Wallachia, Bulgaria, Servia, Bosnia, and part of Croatia and Dalmatia, with Roumelia, Macedonia, Albania, and Thessaly. Turkey in Asia includes Irak, Diarbekr, Kurdistan, part of Armenia, with Roum, Karamania, Anatolia, and Syria. In Africa the Turks claim Egypt, with Nubia, and Barca; and the states of Tripoli and Tunis are under their protection. Of these countries [which see] the climate, productions, manners, &c., must of course be various. The Turks are generally robust, well-shaped, and of good mien. They are grave, sedate, and passive; but, when agitated by passion, furious, raging, and ungovernable; in matters of religion, tenacious, superstitious, and morose. They shave their heads, but wear long beards. The national dress of the Turks is loose and flowing. The turban worn by the men is white, and never put off but when they sleep; and their clothes are long and full. They sit, eat, and sleep on the floor, on cushions, mattresses, and carpets. Their principal food is rice; and the frugal repast is followed by fruit and cold water, which are succeeded by hot coffee and pipes with tobacco. With opium they procure what they call a kief, or placid intoxication. Chess and draughts are favourite games; and the coffee-houses and baths furnish other sources of amusement. Polygamy is allowed among them; but the fair sex are kept under a rigorous confinement. The Turks believe in one God, and that his great prophet is Mohammed. Drinking wine is prohibited by the prophet; instead of it, they generally use sherbet, a liquor made of honey, spices, and the juice of fruits. They expend great sums on caravansaries and fountains, for the refreshment of travellers and labourers, and are charitable toward strangers, let their religion be what it may; and no nation suffers adversity with greater patience. The Turks are excellent horsemen, and throw the djerid or lance with the greatest dexterity; but, excepting this exercise and that of wrestling, they indulge in no active exertion. They never even dance themselves, but enjoy public dances, the performers in which, however, they reckon infamous. Laziness and apathy, indeed, are their distinguishing characteristics. They converse little, and there is nothing in which they take so much delight as in reclining in the shade from sunrise to sunset, apparently in a state of total indifference, occasionally sipping coffee, and inhaling the fumes of tobacco. Whatever may be their object, they saunter through the streets with the same measured and monotonous step. In European Turkey, Constantinople, Adrianople, and Salonica are the chief centres of trade: in Asiatic Turkey, Smyrna and Aleppo are the principal. The internal traffic of Turkey is greatly impeded by the badness of the roads. The government of Turkey is a pure despotism: the Grand Signior is absolute master of the lives and goods of his subjects. The total pop. of the Turkish empire has been estimated at 35,350,000; of whom 15,500,000 are inhab. of Turkey in Europe; 16,050,000, of Asiatic Turkey; and 3,800,000 of the African provinces.

Turnhout, a town of Belgium, prov. Antwerp. Pop. 13,400.

Turon, a sea-port town of Cochin-China, near the mouth of a river that enters the bay of Turon—a safe retreat for ships in the most tempestuous seasons. The houses are low, and mostly built of bamboos, thatched with reedy grass. In the vicinity are plantations of sugar-canes and tobacco. Lat. 16.9 N., lon. 107.40 E.

Tuscany, a grand duchy of Italy, formerly an independent state, but since 1860 forming part of the kingdom of Italy. Its population (including Lucca) numbers 1,826,000. There are in Tuscany numerous iron, alum, and vitriol mines; also quarries of marble, alabaster, and porphyry, besides hot baths and mineral waters. The chief river is the Arno. Many parts of Tuscany are fruitful in corn and wine, and produce plenty of citrons, oranges, pomegranates, and other fruits; but agriculture is generally in a backward state. The inhabitants are distinguished by their attachment to commerce, and have established various manufactures, particularly of silks, stuffs, earthenware, and gilt leather; also iron and copper foundries, hardware factories, and paper mills. One of their principal manufactures is that of straw plait, which employs a vast number of hands.

Tutbury, a market-town of Staffordshire, 15 m. east of Stafford. Pop. 1982.

Tuticorin, a town of Hindoostan, in the Carnatic, where there is a pearl fishery.

Pop. 1,518,000.—The cap. is a city of its name, with a fortress. It is a place of considerable commerce, a large part of its population being engaged in the navigation of the Volga. Pop. about 28,000.

Tweed, a river of Scotland, which rises from numerous springs in the south part of Peebleshire, called Tweedale. It divides that county almost into two equal parts, crosses the north part of Selkirkshire and Roxburghshire, then forms the boundary between Berwickshire and England, and enters the German Ocean at Berwick.

Tweedmouth, a town in the detached part of Durham, called Islandshire. It lies on the right bank of the Tweed, opposite Berwick. Pop. 5414.

Twickenham, a village in Middlesex, on the Thames, near Brentford, containing many handsome villas, among which is Strawberry-hill, the former residence of Horace Walpole. Here also stood the favourite residence of Pope, whose remains are interred in the church. Pop. 10,533.

Tyfy, or Teify, a river of Wales, which issues from a lake on the east side of Cardiganshire, and flows by Tregaron, Lampeter, Newcastle-Emlyn, and Cardigan, into Cardigan Bay.

Tynan, a town in Armagh county, Ireland.

Tyne, a river in Northumberland, formed by a branch from the east part of Cumberland, and another from the hills on the borders of Scotland, which unite a little above Hexham; their junction forms a large river, which flows by Newcastle, and enters the German Ocean at Tyne-mouth.—A river of Scotland, in Haddingtonshire, which rises on the borders of Edinburghshire, flows by Haddington, and enters the German Ocean to the west of Dunbar.

Tynemouth, a sea-bathing town in Northumberland, near the mouth of the Tyne. The ruins of an ancient abbey are seated on a high rock, inaccessible on the sea-side; a strong fort commands the entrance of the river; and there are extensive military barracks. Pop. 38,941.

Tyre (or Soor), a sea-port town of Syria, on the coast of the Mediterranean, 29 m. to the northward of Acre. It represents the ancient city of Tyre, the most famous commercial mart of antiquity, "whose merchants were princes." In the present day, Tyre is an insignificant place, with not more than 3000 inhab., who carry on some little trade in the export of tobacco, cotton, wood, and charcoal.

Tyrnau, a town of Hungary, 27 m. NE. of Presburg. Pop. 5800.

Tyrol, a province of the Austrian empire. It is traversed in its whole extent by the main ridge of the Alps; but, though a mountainous country, the valleys are fertile in corn and wine, and it has an excellent breed of cattle. It likewise yields salt, all kinds of ores, and various sorts of precious stones. The principal rivers are the Inn, Adige, and Eisach. The dress of the peasantry is peculiar: the men wear a straw hat ornamented with ribands and nosegays; the dress of the women consists of a short gown, stockings with cross stripes, and a cap tapering in the shape of a sugar-loaf. They are a sprightly people, fond of music and dancing, and excel in rifle-shooting and athletic amusements. Pop. 925,000.

Tyrone, a county of Ireland, in the province of Ulster, 46 miles long and 37 broad; divided into 35 parishes. It is a rough country, but tolerably fertile. The chief Union, a town of Pennsylvania, U. S., and another in New York.

Union, West, a town of Ohio, U. S., capital of Adams county.

United States (of America), a federal republic of North America, founded in 1783. It then consisted of thirteen States; namely, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Connecticut, New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, N. Carolina, S. Carolina, and Georgia. The following have since been formed, and united to them: Maine, Vermont, Ohio, Indiana, Illinois, Michigan, Kentucky, Tennessee, Alabama, Mississippi, Louisiana, Missouri, Florida, Texas, Wisconsin, Iowa, Arkansas, Minnesota, Kansas, Oregon, Nevada, and California, the three last named lying to the W. of the Rocky Mountains. Virginia has since 1862 been divided into two states (East and West), so that the total number of states now comprehended in the Union is 36. There are, besides, the territories of New Mexico, Utah, Nebraska, Washington, Colorado, Dakota, Arizona, and Idaho. The federal republic is governed by a Congress, consisting of a president, vicepresident, senate, and a house of representatives. Every state has its own governor, constitution, and laws, for its distinct government; and each sends a proportionate number of representatives to the Congress. In the United States there is no religious establishment supported by the ruling power. The judicial part of the constitution nearly corresponds with that of England. The attempted secession of the Southern (and then slaveholding) States, in 1860, with the war which followed, resulted in the abolition of slavery throughout the Union. Until the War of Secession, the U. S. army was small, but the navy is maintained on a large scale; their trading vessels visit every coast, and their internal trade flourishes by means of extensive rivers, with numerous railways and canals. The U. S. in 1812 entered into a war against Britain, which was terminated in 1814. Philadelphia was the seat of gov. till 1800, when the city of Washington became the metropolis. Total pop. of the Union (in 1870) 38,877,000.

Unity, a town of Maryland, U. S., cap. of Montgomery county.

Unst, the most northern of the Shetland Islands. It feeds many sheep, horned cattle, and hogs; and about 80 tons of cured fish are annually exported.

Unterwalden, one of the four forest cantons of Switzerland. The territory consists principally of four valleys, enclosed by high mountains: the climate is temperate, and various kinds of fruit are grown; there is fine pasturage for cattle, but agriculture is comparatively neglected. Unterwalden is divided into two portions—Upper and Lower (or Oberm Wald, and Niederm Wald), the limits of which are marked by an extensive forest that crosses the canton. Sarnen is the chief place in the former, and Stanz in the latter, division. Total pop. 26,116.

Uppingham, a town in Rutlandshire. Pop. 2464.

Upsal, a city of Sweden, capital of Upsala, with a castle, and a university which enjoys a very extensive celebrity. Among the tombs in the cathedral of Upsal are those of Gustavus Vasa and Linnæus. Pop. 9000.

Upsala, or Upland, a prov. of Sweden, in the division of Sweden Proper. It contains extensive forests of pine; but is enriched with inexhaustible mines of copper, iron, and silver; and the peasants are chiefly employed in the manufacture of those metals. Pop. 95,000.

Urgel, a city of Spain, in Catalonia. Lat. 42.24 N., lon. 1.26 E.

Uri, a canton in Switzerland, of which Altorf is the capital. Among the mountains comprised in this canton is the celebrated St Gothard, the passage across which is the principal route from Italy into E. Switzerland. The Reuss, a river remarkable for its extraordinary rapidity, its numerous cataracts, and the magnificent scenery on its banks, rises in Mount St Gothard, and falls into the lake of Lucerne. The pastures of this canton are very superior, and the cheese is in high repute. Pop. 16,100.

Uruguay, a large river of S. America, which rises in Brazil, within the province of Rio Grande do Sul. It flows west along a high valley, and, on emerging from the mountains, overflows the plain to a great extent. It then proceeds SW. and S., forming the western border of the republic of Uruguay, and, after a course of 600 miles, joins the Parana, which junction forms the commencement of the great river Plata.

Uruguay, or Banda Oriental, a republic of South America, adjoining the SW border of Brazil. It is 230 miles long and 170 broad, and possesses three principal towns, Monte Video, La Colonia, and Maldonado, besides 15 small towns and several hamlets. It formed a province under the gov. of Buenos Ayres till 1821, when it was taken by the Brazilians, but it has since been declared independent. It is fertile, and watered by many streams, which terminate in the river Uruguay, on its west border. The coast is low and flat, but there are several hill-ranges inland. Pop. estimated at 350,000.

Urumiyah, or Oormiah, a town of Persia, prov. Azerbaijan. Pop. 12,000. The Lake of Urumiyah extends above a degree of latitude in length, and its water is so salt that no fish will live in it.

Usbeck Tartary. See Bokhara.

Utah, a Territory of the United States of North America, embracing the settlement of the Mormon community, on the shores of the Great Salt Lake. The Utah Territory exhibits natural features of a very singular character. It forms a high plateau, from 4000 to 5000 feet above the sea-level, enclosed on all sides by mountain-chains, and drained by a system of rivers which have no outlet to the sea,—resembling, in these respects, some of the interior plateaus of the Asiatic continent. The Rocky Mountains form the eastern frontier of the Territory, and require to be traversed in the journey thither from the easterly and central portions of the United States. The Sierra Nevada, on the west, mark the limit between Utah and the State of California. The general aspect of the Territory is arid and desert, but there are portions which possess great fertility and abundant natural resources. The name of the entire Territory is derived from Lake Utah, which is a body of fresh water, 30 miles in length, and whence a stream (about 40 miles in length) is discharged into the Great Salt Lake. The latter is 75 miles long, and has a very irregular outline. Utah was organized as a Territory of the U. S. in 1850. Pop. 87,000. Salt Lake City is its capital, and the head-seat of the Mormons.

It is a valley, 100 miles long and 20 broad. between ridges of high mountains, among which are the Great St Bernard, Simplon, Grimsel, Furca, and others, the summits of which are never free from snow. The river Rhone flows impetuously through its whole length. A country consisting of plains, elevated valleys, lofty mountains, clothed with wood and studded with hamlets, rugged rocks, cataracts, glaciers, and snow-clad mountains, must exhibit a great variety of climates and prospects. It has more than sufficient wine and corn for interior consumption, the soil in the midland and lower districts being exceedingly rich and fertile; but in the more elevated parts barley is the only grain that can be cultivated with success. The inhabitants profess the Roman Catholic religion. Pop. 96,887.

It constitutes a possession of Britain, and was in 1858 attached to the newly-formed colony of British Columbia. Vancouver Island embraces an area of 14,000 sq. miles. The interior is chiefly hilly. The coasts contain numerous good harbours. Good coal occurs on the east side of the island, and is worked with advantage. Iron and lead have also been observed. There is a native Indian population variously estimated at at from 10,000 to 20,000. The only town is Victoria, founded on the shore of Royal Bay, at the SE. extremity of the island.

Van Diemen's Land (or Tasmania), an island belonging to Great Britain, off the southern coast of the Australian continent, from which it is separated by Bass Strait. The land is chiefly high, diversified with moderate hills and broad valleys, which are well wooded and watered. The forest-trees are chiefly of the pine kind, growing quite straight to a height proper for masts. The quadrupeds and birds differ little from those of the Australian mainland. The great articles of export are wool, oil, whalebone, and bark. The principal rivers are the Derwent and Tamar, whose sources are near the centre of the island. In 1804 a British settlement was established on the south-east part, within the mouth of the Derwent, and named Hobart Town, which is the seat of government. Pop. (in 1870) 99,000.

Venezuela, a republic of South America, forming the eastern portion of the former republic of Columbia, and (during its pe-riod of subjection to Spanish rule) con-stituting the captaincy-general of Cara-cas. Venezuela lies along the southern shores of the Caribbean Sea, extending inland to the mountain-system of the Sierra Parime, and embracing 450,000 sq. miles of diversified territory. The most important of its natural features is the great river Orinoco, which has its whole course through this state, with the excep-tion of a short distance during which it forms the boundary between Venezuela and the adjoining republic of New Gra-nada. To the eastward, Venezuela bor-ders upon the British province of Guiana. The immense plains of Venezuela, water-ed by the Orinoco and its tributaries, pos-sess a fertile soil, and—under the combined influences of moisture and heat—display a rich tropical vegetation. The natural resources of the territory, in the vegetable kingdom, are, indeed, very considerable. The forests abound in numerous valuable woods, as mahogany, cedar, iron-wood, and many others. The cocoa-nut, cotton, tobacco, indigo, yam, cochineal-plant, ca-cao, and many other valuable plants, are common, and the sugar-cane is extensivel-y cultivated. The variety of animal life is equally great. Venezuela is thinly in-habited, its total population (in 1870,) not exceeding 1,565,000. Of these (as in most of the South American states) Indians and mixed races constitute by far the larger proportion. The white population is al-most exclusively of Spanish descent, and the Spanish language is uniformly spoken. There are few manufactures, but a con-siderable amount of foreign trade is car-ried on, principally with Great Britain. Caracas is the cap. of the republic.

Venice, a celebrated city and sea-port of Italy, situated in the middle of extensive lagoons, which adjoin the NW. coast of the Adriatic Sea. During the middle ages, Venice was long the capital of an inde-pendent republic, conspicuous for its com-mercial enterprise and maritime supre-macy. The existence of this republic was terminated by Napoleon I., and, in the subsequent course of political events, the city of Venice—with the whole adja-cent territory of Northern Italy—passed under the sway of Austria. During the revolutionary movements of 1848, the Venetians made a bold effort to throw off the Austrian yoke but were ultimately obliged to succumb. Venice now constitutes the chief city of the NE. division of the kingdom of Italy. The inhabitants have a flourishing trade in silk manufactures, bonelace, and all sorts of glasses and mir-rors. Most of the houses have a door opening upon a canal, and another into a street; by means of which, and of the bridges, of which there are a prodigious number, a person may go to any part of the city by land or by water. The churches and convents are numerous, and rich in paintings; indeed, Venice surpasses, in this respect, even Rome itself. The an-cient ducal palace is an immense building; and there are numerous other edifices of note. In this city a famous carnival is held from Christmas till Ash-Wednes-day; in all which time libertinism reigns, and thousands of foreigners frequent it from all parts of Europe. The chief diver-sions are ridottos and masquerades; and St Mark's Place is the general rendezvous. Pop. 130,000.

Vermont, one of the United States of America, 158 miles long, and 70 broad, divided into 13 counties. A chain of mountains divides the State nearly in the centre, between the river Connecticut and Lake Champlain. The natural growth upon this chain is hemlock, pine, spruce, and other evergreens; hence they are called the Green Mountains, and give name to the State. The country is generally hilly, but not rocky, and the soil is fertile. Iron ore abounds, and renders the State the seat of flourishing manufactures of everything made of iron and steel; the other chief manufactures are pot and pearl-ash, maple sugar, and spirits. Total pop. 330,000.

Verneuil, a small town in Eure, and another in Allier, France.

Vernon, a town in Eure, France. Pop. 4000.

Verona, a strong city of North Italy. It has three forts, and is surrounded by thick walls and deep ditches. This city is famous for antiquities; the most remarkable is a Roman amphitheatre, of which seven rows of benches are still entire. In the townhouse are the statues of five illustrious natives—Catullus, Æmilius Macer, Cornelius Nepos, the elder Pliny, and Vitruvius. Verona possesses many interesting specimens of the architecture of the middle ages; as well as valuable collections of paintings, antiques, and other curiosities. It has numerous silk-twist factories, and also manufactories for the weaving of silk, woollen, and linen fabrics, besides leather, earthenware, soap establishments, &c. Pop. 59,000.

Vesuvius, a volcanic mountain of Italy, five miles from Naples. It is nearly 30 m. in circuit at the base, and about 3800 feet high. The base on all sides is surrounded with towns, which, with the villages and villas above them to some height, cover the lower parts of the mountain with fertility, beauty, and population. The next region is a scene of perfect devastation, furrowed on all sides with streams of lava. The upper part is covered almost entirely with ashes, and extremely difficult of ascent. The top of this is a narrow ledge of burnt earth or cinders, nearly two miles in circuit, with the crater open beneath, about 350 feet in depth. The eruption of Vesuvius in the year 79, in the time of Titus, was accompanied by an earthquake that overturned several cities, particularly Pompeii and Herculaneum, and proved fatal to Pliny the naturalist. From that time down to the present day frequent eruptions have occurred.

Victoria, a British colony, situated in the Australian division of the globe, and occupying the SE. portion of the Australian continent. Prior to 1850, Victoria constituted a portion of the adjoining colony of New South Wales, and was known as the Port Phillip district, deriving that name from a fine inlet of the sea, which indents its maritime frontier. The waters of the Southern Ocean marks the south and south-eastern frontiers of Victoria; to the north-east and north it is bounded by New South Wales; and to the westward by the province of South Australia—the line of the 141st meridian marking, in the latter case, the common frontier. The dividing-line between Victoria and New South Wales is marked by a line drawn from Cape Howe (the SE. extremity of the Australian continent) to the source of the river Murray, and thence along that stream until it meets the meridian of 141°. The area comprised within the limits of the province is about 98,000 sq. miles, within which is found a larger proportion of fertile and available soil than occurs in the other Australian settlements. The coast line of Victoria is little short of 700 m. in length, and comprises several inlets, the two most considerable of which are Port Phillip and Western Port. The river Yarra (upon which Melbourne, the capital of the province, is situated) falls into the head of Port Phillip. The larger portion of Victoria exhibits a diversified surface, and in the eastern division of the province is the high chain of the Australian Alps, which stretch into the adjoining colony of New South Wales. It is, on the whole, well watered—and even abundantly so, by comparison with most other portions of Australia. The Ovens, Goulburn, Loddon, and other streams, belong to the basin of the Murray; the Glenelg, Barwon, and Yarra-Yarra, belong to the seaward slope of the province. The climate of Victoria is dry and healthy. The productions of the vegetable and animal kingdom resemble, in general, those of other portions of Australia, and exhibit the same marked difference from the plants and animals that are native to other regions. But the industry and energy of the colonial population are rapidly modifying (and even obliterating) these peculiarities of the southern continent, and imparting to it a more English aspect. The soil is well suited to the growth of the grains and fruits which belong to the warmer latitudes of Europe, and the pastures of Victoria rear almost countless flocks of sheep. The wool furnished by the latter constituted, until within a recent period, the chief exportable produce of the colonists. But in 1851, gold was discovered to exist—in abundance unheard of elsewhere (with the sole exception of California)—within the province, and its rich gold-fields have since proved the main source of attraction that has carried thousands, and even tens of thousands, of emigrants to the shores of Victoria. Prior to this event, the population of the province was only 77,000. At the commencement of 1856, Victoria had a population exceeding 325,000, and in 1857 the number had increased to 414,000. At the present time (1873) it exceeds 730,000. Such are the astonishing results due to the mineral wealth of this golden region—the true "El-Dorado" of the modern world. For several years past, the quantity of the precious metal which the gold-fields of Victoria have supplied to the markets of the world has exceeded a value of £10,000,000 annually, nor does there appear to be any present fear of a diminution in the supply. Towns and villages have sprung up—as if by enchantment—in the locality of the principal "diggings," and many of them are already connected with the capital, Melbourne, by railway, while roads are either already made, or in process of being laid out, through the entire length and breadth of the province. The neighbourhood of Castlemaine (65 miles to the NW. of Melbourne), Ballarat (40 miles to the westward of that city), and the valley of the Ovens river, further to the north-eastward, are among the most important and populous of the gold-fields. Portland Bay, in the westerly division of the province, is the outlet for a rich agricultural tract of country, rapidly increasing in population. Victoria has enjoyed since 1850—with the other Australian colonies—the privileges of representative government; its legislature consisting of two elective chambers (an Upper and a Lower House), presided over by a governor, whose appointment rests with the crown. Melbourne is the capital of the province.

Wales, a principality in the west of England, 120 miles long and 80 broad, containing 7425 square miles, or 4,752,000 acres. It is divided into North and South Wales, each containing six counties; namely, Anglesey, Caernarvon, Denbigh, Flint, Merioneth, and Montgomery, in North Wales; Brecknock, Cardigan, Caermarthen, Glamorgan, Pembroke, and Radnor, in South Wales. To this country the ancient Britons fled, when England was invaded by the Saxons. The Welsh were long governed by independent kings, till the reign of Edward I., when their last prince, Llewellyn, being vanquished and slain, in 1283, the country was united to England. The natives submitted to the English dominion with extreme reluctance; and Edward, as a conciliatory measure, promised to give them for their prince a Welshman by birth, and one who could speak no other language. Accordingly, he invested his second son, Edward, then an infant, who had been born at Caernarvon. The death of his eldest son, Alphonso, happening soon after, young Edward became heir, also, of the English monarchy, and united both nations under one government. From the time of Edward II., the eldest son of the king of England has always been created Prince of Wales. The country is mountainous, but not barren, producing all the necessaries of life; the cattle and sheep are numerous, but small, and it is particularly famous for goats. It is watered by many rivers, the principal of which, and other particulars, are noted in our account of the different counties. The rearing of stock is the most important branch of husbandry, and iron is the principal mineral product. Pop. (in 1871) 1,217,135. See England.

Wiltshire, a county of England, 53 miles long and 38 broad, containing 882,560 acres, divided into 28 hundreds and 302 parishes, and having one city and 23 market-towns. The land in the northern parts is generally hilly and woody, but very fertile. In the middle it chiefly consists of downs that afford good pasture for sheep; and in the valleys, which divide the downs, are corn-fields and rich meadows. Immense numbers of sheep are pastured here; and the most valuable commodities are wool, wood, and stone: the chief manufactures are the different branches of the clothing trade. The principal rivers are the Upper and Lower Avon, the Nadder, Willy, Bourn, and Kennet. Total pop. 257,177.

Wimbledon, a village in Surrey, on an elevated heath, seven miles from London.

The manufacture of silk goods, cotton stockings, &c., is carried on here on a small scale. Near this town is the ruin of Sudeley Castle, where Catherine Parr, queen of Henry VIII., and afterwards wife of Sir Thomas Seymour, died in childbed, not without suspicion of poison. Pop. 2937.

Winchelsea, a market-town in Sussex, an appendage to the Cinque Ports. Two miles east-north-east of the town is Camber Castle, built by Henry VIII. It is singular that Old Winchelsea, a town of importance under the Romans, was destroyed by the encroachments of the sea in the 13th century, and that the new town was ruined by a cause precisely opposite in the 16th century. Pop. 719.

Winchendon, a town of Massachusetts, in the United States.

Winchester, a city in Hampshire, seated on the Itchen, and one of the most ancient towns in the kingdom. In its magnificent cathedral were interred several Saxon kings and queens, whose bones were collected by Bishop Fox, put into six gilded coffins, and placed on a wall in the south side of the choir. In this cathedral also is the marble coffin of William Rufus. On a fine eminence stood the castle, which was taken from Charles I., and afterwards demolished, except the magnificent hall, in which the assizes are now held. On the site of the castle Charles II. erected a palace, which was never completed, and now serves as infantry barracks. Here, also, is St Mary's College, founded by William Wykeham, which has exhibitions for New College, Oxford. Winchester was of great note in the time of the Saxons, and here Egbert was crowned first sole monarch of England. Here Henry II. held a parliament, King John resided, Henry III. was born, Richard II. held a parliament, and Henry IV. was married, as was also Mary I. Pop. 16,266.—A town in Virginia, U. S.—Another, in Kentucky.

Windsor, a borough and royal residence in Berkshire, situate within a bend of the Thames, over which is a bridge to Eton. It is celebrated for a magnificent castle, on a high hill, built originally by William I., and enlarged by Henry I. It was the residence of the succeeding monarchs, till Edward III. (who was born in it) caused the ancient building to be taken down, and began the present structure and St George's Chapel. Great additions were made to the castle by Edward IV., Henry VII., Henry VIII., and Elizabeth; and George III. contributed much to its improvement, made it his chief residence, and died here in 1820. George IV. also (who died here in 1830), made many important additions. St George's Chapel, begun by Edward III., was finished by Henry VII. In this chapel are interred Henry VI., Edward IV., Henry VIII., his queen Jane Seymour, and Charles I. And at the east end a large vault was constructed in 1810, by order of George III., as a place of sepulture for himself and his family. The principal and most magnificent entrance to the castle is on the south, by the Gateway of George IV., between the York and Lancaster Towers. St George's Hall, the banqueting-room of the Knights of the Garter, is 200 feet in length, with an arched ceiling divided into compartments and panels; in which are nearly 700 shields, with the arms of the knights emblazoned on them; and at the east end is the throne, under a rich canopy. On the south side of the town is the Great Park, which is 14 miles in circuit; it has a noble road from the town, near three miles in length, adorned on each side with a double plantation of stately trees, to the summit of a delightful hill, on which is Cumberland Lodge. The Little Park is a fine expanse of lawn, comprising nearly 500 acres round the E. and N. sides of the castle. Pop. 11,749. — A town of Vermont, U. Württemberg a kingdom of Germany forming the third in point of size (and the fourth in respect of population and political rank) of the states that constitute the present German Empire. Württemberg occupies part of south-western Germany, and is very nearly enclosed between the states of Bavaria and Baden—the former on the east and south-east, the latter on the north and west. It touches the lake of Constance upon a small portion of its southern frontier. The eastern slopes of the Black Forest advance far into Württemberg on the side adjoining Baden, and the rugged mass of the Rauhe Alp diversifies the central and easterly portions of the territory. The Danube crosses Württemberg from west to east, to the southward of the hilly region; but the larger portion of the kingdom is watered by the Neckar, and its various tributaries. Large portions of Würtemberg are distinguished by a beautiful climate and a highly fertile soil: within the valleys of the Neckar and its affluents, the vine is cultivated upon an extensive scale, and the fig and melon ripen in the open air. Among minerals, salt, limestone, gypsum, alabaster, and slate occur, together with coal and iron-ore in limited quantity. Manufacturing industry has made considerable progress within recent years. Linen and cotton goods, paper, wooden clocks, toys, various articles in gold and silver, with chemical products, engage the attention of its artizans. The government is an hereditary monarchy, limited by two constitutional chambers—an upper and lower house, the latter elective. The modern kingdom of Würtemberg dates from the period of supreme continental power enjoyed by the first Napoleon, who raised it from the rank of a dukedom. Würtemberg is divided into four circles. The capital city is Stuttgart. Pop. (in 1871) 1,818,000.

York, a city, the capital of Yorkshire, and an archbishop's see. It stands on the banks of the river Ouse, in the centre of a rich and fertile plain. It was the Eboracum of the Romans, at that time the first city in Britain, and continued in great power till the time of William I., by whom it was destroyed, after having surrendered to him through famine. York never afterwards attained its former elevation of grandeur; though in point of rank it is still deemed the second city in the kingdom. The cathedral or Minster, as a specimen of ecclesiastical architecture, is justly esteemed the glory of Great Britain. In 1829 it was set on fire, and in part destroyed, by a lunatic; but was speedily restored. Another destructive fire occurred in 1840: the injury then sustained has, however, been also repaired, and the magnificent edifice again appears in all its original grandeur. Besides the cathedral, York contains 17 churches in use; though in the reign of Henry V. there were 44 parish churches, 17 chapels, and nine religious houses. The castle, which was formerly a place of great strength, is now a county prison for debtors and felons. Near it, on an artificial mount, is Clifford's Tower, a round shell, said by some to have been raised by William I., but others deem it a Roman work. York is a county of itself, including Ainsty Liberty, in which are 35 villages and hamlets. The guildhall, built in 1446, is a grand structure, supported by two rows of oak pillars, each pillar being the stem of a single tree. Among the modern buildings are a noble assembly-house, a museum, an elegant court-house, a theatre-royal, a county hospital, and an asylum for lunatics. Pop. 43,796.—A town of Pennsylvania, capital of a fertile county. Lat. 39.58 N., lon. 76.42 W.—A sea-port of Maine, capital of a county. Lat. 43.7 N., lon. 70.45 W.—A town of South Carolina, capital of a co.

Yorkshire, the largest county in England, extending 90 miles from north to south, and 115 from east to west, and containing 3,669,510 acres. It is divided into three ridings, called the North, East, and West; which are subdivided into 26 wapentakes and 634 parishes, with one city and 60 market-towns. The air and soil of this extensive county vary extremely. On the hilly parts of the East Riding, especially in what is called the York Wolds, the soil is generally barren, dry, and sandy. The West Riding, which is much the largest, enjoys a sharp but healthy air: the land on its western side is hilly, and not very fruitful; but the intermediate valleys consist of much good arable ground, and excellent pasture for cattle, horses, and sheep. It also produces iron, coal, and lime, in great abundance. This is essentially the manufacturing district; Leeds, Bradford, Halifax, Huddersfield, and Wakefield being the great seats of the woollen manufacture, and Sheffield rivaling the hardware manufactories of Birmingham. The North Riding, in general, exceeds the other two in the salubrity of the air. The worst parts breed lean cattle; but, on the sides of the hills, in the valleys and plains, it produces good corn, and rich pasture for large cattle. In Yorkshire, likewise, are the districts of Holderness, on the borders of the Humber; Cleveland, on the confines of Durham; and Craven, on the borders of Westmoreland and Lancashire. In this last district are the high mountains named Wharfedale, Ingleborough, and Pennine. The principal rivers are the Ouse, Aire, Don, Derwent, Calder, Wharfe, Nidd, Ure, and Hull, and they all terminate in the Humber, which enters the German Ocean between Yorkshire and Lincolnshire. Total pop. 2,436,355.

a The Isle of Wight, though considered as a part of Hampshire, was made independent of it (for parliamentary purposes) in 1832. The Isle of Man, the Channel Isles, the Scilly Isles, and Berwick-upon-Tweed, are dependencies of the Crown of England, not attached to any country. Berwick, however, is represented in the Imperial Parliament, and subject to the laws and supreme courts of England; the Isle of Man and the Channel Isles have laws, legislatures, and judiciary establishments of their own.

A DILIGENT MAN CAN ALWAYS FIND LEISURE, A LAZY ONE NEVER.

HE THAT HAS NO STOMACH TO HIS BOOK WILL THRIVE BADLY ON IT.

HE THAT LIVES UPON HOPES WILL DIE FASTING.

HONOR FIDELITATIS PREMIUM.—HONOUR IS THE REWARD OF FIDELITY.

ABACÆNUM, a town of Sicily, near Messana.

Ab'æ, a town of Phocis, in Greece, where was a celebrated temple and oracle of Apollo.

Aban'tes, the earliest inhabitants of Eubœa.

Ab'aris, a mythical priest of Apollo, amongst the Hyperboreans, who visited Greece, and was believed to possess the gift of prophecy, and the power of riding through the air on an arrow. The time at which he lived is extremely uncertain.

Ab'as, a mythical king of Argos, the grandson of Danaus. His descendants were called Abantiades.

Abd'era, a maritime town of Thrace, first occupied by the Clazomenians, under Timesias, 654, B. C. In 543, B. C. the Teians, whose city had been taken by Harpagus, removed hither, but afterwards returned to Ionia [Teos]. Xerxes was entertained here when he invaded Greece, and again on his flight after the defeat at Salamis, 480, B. C. Its decline commenced soon after the overthrow of the supremacy of Athens, and its name was forgotten when the Roman Empire fell. The philosophers Democritus, Protagoras, and Anarchus, with other celebrated persons, were natives of this town; notwithstanding which, its name was employed proverbially for stolid stupidity.

Ab'garus, or Ag'barus, the name of a family of princes of Edessa, in Mesopotamia; one of whom, surnamed Mannus, betrayed Crassus and his army into the hands of the Parthians, 53, B. C. Amongst the apocryphal Christian writings is a letter, purporting to have been sent by one of these princes to our Lord, with our Lord's reply; said by Eusebius, who first mentions them, to have been found at Edessa.

Ab'ila, Abile'ne, a town and a tetrarchy of Syria, mentioned in the New Testament, and from 31 to 4, B. C., held by Herod the Great. The town was also called Claudopolis, after the Emperor Claudius, who enriched Herod Agrippa, its governor, 37, A. D.

Ab'nova, the name of the tract of hilly country in Germany, subsequently known as the Marcian Forest, and the Black Forest. Tacitus calls it a mountain.

Abori'gines, a people of Italy, who preceded the Latins as inhabitants of Latium.

Abor'rhas, a river of Mesopotamia, falling into the Euphrates; also called Araxes.

Absyr'tus, the brother of Medea; whom (according to the legend) she killed, and tearing his body into pieces, scattered them in the way, along which she was flying with Jason, for the purpose of retarding her father's pursuit.

Aby'dos, a town on the Asiatic side of the Hellespont, famous as the scene of the story of Hero and Leander.—A city of Egypt, where was discovered a tablet containing the names of twenty-six kings of Egypt, who ruled before Rameses the Great. The temple of Osiris, and the Memnonium, which yet remain, attest the former grandeur of this place.

A'byla, a mountain of Africa, opposite to Mount Calpe, in Europe; and one of the so called "Pillars of Hercules."

Academi'a, a suburb of Athens, so named after Academus, a legendary hero of Attica, who was reputed its earliest possessor. In the splendid period of the history of Athens it was a gymnasium, adorned with groves of olive and plane trees, statues, and fountains. Plato taught his philosophy here, and on this account it was named Academic. It was ravaged by Sulla, when he besieged Athens, 86, B. C.; but did not lose its renown until the final overthrow of the ancient heathenism.

Acan'thus, a town in that part of Macedonia called Chalcidice. It was not far from the canal which Xerxes constructed across the isthmus of Mount Athos; and its inhabitants, who were originally colonists from the isle of Andros, assisted him when he invaded Greece, 480, B. C. Its site cannot be ascertained.

Acarna'nia, a territory of Greece, lying on the Ionian Sea and the Ambracian Gulf, and divided by the river Achelous from Ætolia. Little is known of its inhabitants before the Peloponnesian War, when they took part with the Athenians against the Corinthians, who had established colonies on their coast, and interfered with their piratical habits. They fought under Demosthenes at Olpæ, and defeated the Peloponnesians of Ambracia, 426, B. C. At a later period they attached themselves to the Macedonian cause; and joined the Achæan League, 220, B. C. They submitted to Rome after the defeat of Philip V. at Cynoscephalæ, 197, B. C., but joined Antiochus the Great, when he invaded Greece, 191, B. C. Nothing more is recorded of them in history, and about the Christian era the country was little better than a waste.

Acas'tus, legendary king of Iolcus; the son of Pelias and brother of Medea. He took part in the voyage of the Argonaut, and in the chase of the Calydonian boar. He was killed by Peleus, whom he had left asleep and disarmed on Mount Pelion, to be killed by the Centaurs, in consequence of the false accusations of his wife.

Ac'ca Lauren'tia, according to some of the legends of early Rome, the wife of Faustus, the shepherd who found Romulus and Remus, and their nurse after they had been recovered from the she-wolf.

Ac'cius, or At'tius, L., a Roman poet, born about 170, B. C., who wrote tragedies, principally in imitation of Greek plays; and metrical annals. His works were greatly admired, but they have all perished, with the exception of some passages from his tragedies, which were quoted by Cicero, and other writers. He lived till nearly eighty years old, but the date of his death is unknown.

Ac'ce, or Ac'cho. See Ptolemais.

Acer'ra, a town of Campania, in Italy, burnt by Hannibal, 216, B. C., but rebuilt and raised to the rank of a colony by Augustus.—A town of Cisalpine Gaul, in the country of the Insubrians.

Aces'nes, the river of the Punjab, in India, now called the Chenaub, which flows into the Indus.

Aces'tes, the mythic founder of Segesta, in Sicily. According to Virgil, he entertained Aeneas, when he visited Sicily in his voyage to Latium.

Achæ'i, one of the principal Grecian races. In the mythical pedigrees they appear as the descendants of Achæus, who was the grandson of Hellen. The legends intimate that the original seat of the Achæans was in Thessaly, and that they in early times made themselves masters of almost all Peloponnesus; that at the "Return of the Heraclidæ," they were driven out of the south-eastern part of that country, but under Tisamenus drove out the Ionians from the northern coast, and occupied it, whence that part of Greece is always called Achaia.

Achæ'menes, the founder of the Persian dynasty of Achæmenidæ, according to Herodotus.—A brother of Xerxes, who was governor of Egypt, 480, B. C. He was defeated and killed by Inarus, 460, B. C.

Achæ'i'a, the narrow tract lying on the south coast of the Corinthian Gulf, between Sicyonia and Elis, called Ægialus until taken possession of by the Achæans under Tisamenus, at the "Return of the Heraclidæ." It contained twelve cities, which were banded in a league for their common safety, and of which Dynæ, Patræ, and Pellene were the most important. Achaia took no part in the contests which occurred during the most famous period of Grecian history; and but dimly appears in the struggle against the overwhelming force of Macedonia. But when the glory of Greece seemed all to have passed away, it suddenly shook off its long lethargy, and for above a hundred years revived and sustained the ancient Hellenic renown. The Achæan League was formed in 281, B. C.; it was joined in 251, B. C., by Aratus of Sicyon, and immediately became the ruling power in Greece. Sparta, Corinth, and Athens joined it; it engaged in war with the rival League of the Ætolians; and it seemed destined to reëstablish the old freedom. But it made common cause with the kings of Macedonia, whom it was first set up to resist, and placed itself in opposition to Rome. And it was unable to cope either with the arms or the diplomacy of the rising Empire; whilst internal divisions aggravated its difficulties. Its downfall was hastened by a traitor, Calli-crates, who, after the death of Philopæmen, was able to use the League for the purposes of the Romans, and gave up to them as hostages above 1000 of the Achæan leaders. At length the League declared war against Rome, and in one brief campaign it was entirely overthrown. This happened in 146, B. C., and the whole of the southern part of Greece was then organised as a province, bearing the name of Achaia.

Ach'ates, the faithful companion of Aeneas in his voyage from Troy to Latium, according to Virgil.

Achel'ous, the name of the most considerable river of Greece, and of its god. This river rises in Mount Pindus, and flows into the Ionian Sea. Achelous was said to be the eldest son of Oceanus and Tethys; he was vanquished by Hercules in a contest for the hand of Deianira, although he assumed successively the forms of a serpent and of a bull. He lost one of his horns in the fight, but it was restored to him, on his giving up the horn of Amal-thea. The deification and worship of this river dates from very ancient times, and was universal in Greece.

Ac'heron, the name of the principal river of the fabled infernal regions; and of several actual rivers, one of which was in Epirus, in Greece, and another in Southern Italy.

Acheru'sia, a lake in Epirus, through which the river Acheron flowed. Several other lakes bore the same name.

Achil'las, one of the guardians of Ptolemy Dionysus, the young king of Egypt. He assassinated Pompey, when he fled to Egypt after the battle of Pharsalia, in 48, B. C.; and opposed Julius Cæsar, with some success. But in the following year he was put to death by order of Arsinoë, the sister of Ptolemy.

Achil'les, one of the most renowned heroes of legendary Greece. According to the most generally received stories, he was the son of Peleus, of Phthiotis, in Thessaly, and Thetis, one of the daughters of Nereus. His mother was said, by dipping him in the river Styx, to have rendered him invulnerable in every part except the heel by which she held him. He was instructed by the centaur Chiron. When the Greeks had long besieged Troy in vain, the prophet Calchas announced that the presence of Achilles was indispensable. His deeds are celebrated in the Iliad of Homer; who particularly relates his quarrel with Agamemnon, and the evils it brought on the besiegers. His greatest exploit was the death of Hector, whom he slew to revenge his friend Patroclus. On the capture of the city, Poly-xena was promised him as his wife, but while he stood before the altar of Apollo, her brother Paris wounded him mortally with an arrow in his vulnerable heel. The possession of his armour, which had been fabricated for him by Vulcan, was contested by Ulysses and Ajax; and the former obtained it. The earliest legends of this hero are the most pleasing. He was honoured with sacrifices and temples in many parts of Greece.

Achilles Ta'tius, the writer of a species of novel or romantic love story, called the Adventures of Leucippe and Clitophon. He lived about 600, A. D.

Achille'um, a town of Troas, on the Hellespont, near Sigeum, where the hero Achilles was said to be buried.

Achilleus, made himself emperor in Egypt about 292, A. D., and was taken and put to death by Diocletian in 297, A. D.

Acida'lia, a name of Venus, from a fountain near Orchomenus, in Greece.

A'cis, a shepherd of Sicily, according to Ovid, who was preferred by the nymph Galatea to the Cyclops Polyphemus, and crushed by him under a mass of rock, but changed into a streamlet.

Acon'tius, a handsome youth, celebrated by Ovid for the stratagem by which he procured the hand of Cydippe.

A'cræ, a town of Sicily, founded by the Syracusans, in about 665, B. C., on the heights to the west of their city.

Acris'ius, a legendary king of Argos, father of Danaë, and grandfather of Perseus. His history will be given under their names.

Acrocerau'nia, a promontory of Epirus, running out into the Adriatic Sea.

Acrop'olis, the citadel of Athens, situated on a rock in the centre of the city, on which stood the Parthenon, or temple of Pallas, the temple of Erectheus, and other buildings of note.

Actæ'on, a famous huntsman, who, according to Ovid, was turned into a stag, and torn to pieces by his own hounds, because he had looked upon Diana as she was bathing.

Acte, a name of the promontory on which Mount Athos stands.

Actium, a headland at the entrance to the Gulf of Ambracia, in Acarmania, near which Octavian defeated the fleet of Antony and Cleopatra, on the 2nd of Sept., 31, B. C., and made himself master of the Roman Empire. [Nicopolis.]

Ada'ne, or Ara'bia Felix, a port of the Homerites at the southern extremity of Arabia, and a noted place of trade. It is now Aden [see Gazetteer], and belongs to the English.

Adiabene, a country of Assyria, on the river Tigris.

Admæ'tus, a legendary king of Pheræ, in Thessaly, whom Apollo served, as herdsman, when he was banished from heaven.

Ado'nis, a beautiful youth, beloved by Venus, and killed by a wild boar, to the intense grief of the goddess. He was afterwards permitted to spend half of any year with her on the earth; and there were yearly festivals in Phœnicia, commemorating his death, and his annual return to the upper world.

Adramyt'tium, a town of Mysia, standing on the gulf of the same name, at the mouth of the river Caicus.

Adrastus, a legendary king of Argos, and one of the seven heroes who fought against Thebes. When expelled from his own kingdom by Amphiarus, he became king of Sicyon; but he afterwards regained his own throne. He was the founder of the Nemæan games. He alone escaped in the first war against Thebes; and in the second war, his son was the only leader who fell; and he died of grief for him.—A Phrygian prince, who, having accidentally killed his brother, took refuge with Cræsus, king of Lydia, whose son Atys he also accidentally slew, and then slew himself.

A'dria, the Adriatic Sea, so called from a town of that name, seated between the mouths of the rivers Athesis and Padus.

Aduat'ici, a tribe of Belgic Gauls, who dwelt near the mouths of the rivers Scaldis and Mosa.

Æacus, a legendary king of the Myrmidons, and son of Jupiter and Ægina. After his death he was made one of the judges in the infernal regions. His descendants were called Æacides.

Ædon, the daughter of Pandareus, and wife of Zethus, who had but one son; and envying the numerous family of her sister-in-law, Niobe, attempted to kill her eldest nephew, but by mistake killed her own child, and was turned into a nightingale.

Ædui, or Hedui, a numerous and powerful tribe of the Celtic Gauls, who dwelt in the centre of the country, between the rivers Arar and Liger. They had been declared "the friends of the Roman people," 121, B. C.; and having been made independent of the Sequani by Julius Cæsar, afterwards revolted against him, and were subdued, in 52, B. C.

Ægæ, the original capital of Macedonia, and place of burial for its kings.—One of the twelve towns of Achaia, which formed the ancient League.

Ægæ'an Sea, The, the ancient name of the Archipelago [see Gazetteer] which lies between Greece and Asia Minor. [Cyclades, Sporades.]

Ægæ'on, a name of the Titan Briareus.

Ægæ'tes, a group of small islands near to the west coast of Sicily, close to which the Romans defeated the Carthaginians, 241, B. C. and ended the First Punic War.

Ægeus, a legendary king of Athens, who, having been dethroned, was restored by his son Theseus. He threw himself into the sea, when he saw the black sails of his son's ship on his return from Crete, whither he had gone to rid Athens of the tribute it had paid Minos.

Ægi'ale, the wife of Diomedes.

Ægid'ius, a Roman commander, who was chosen king by the Franks, in Gaul, and governed there independently in the decline of the Empire. He died 464, A. D.

Ægi'na, a small and rugged island in the Saronic Gulf, originally colonised by Achæans and Dorians, and the seat of a powerful and wealthy state before 500, B. C. It long resisted the supremacy of Athens; but it was at length conquered, and all its people banished, 430, B. C. The silver coins of Ægina circulated throughout the Grecian world; and it was famous for the cultivation of the fine arts, particularly of sculpture. The legends of Greece derived its name from a daughter of the river-god Asopus; who bore a son to Jupiter, called Æacus; for whom ants were changed into men, and called Myrmidons.

Ægira, one of the towns of Achaia, which joined in the Achæan League.

Ægisthus, a legendary king of Argos, who, during the absence of Agamemnon at Troy, seduced his wife Clytemnestra; and with her assistance murdered him on his return. He was afterwards killed by Orestes, the son of Agamemnon.

Ægium, the chief city of Achaia.

Ægospotamos, a river of Thrace, running into the Hellespont, near the mouth of which Lysander defeated the Athenian fleet, which was, in fact, the end of the Peloponnesian War, 405, B. C.

Ægyptus, brother of Lanaus, and king of Egypt; his fifty sons were married to the fifty daughters of his brother [Danaïdæ], and all but one murdered on the wedding night.

Ægyptus, the country now called Egypt [see Gazetteer]. It properly consisted of the valley of the river Nile alone, between Æthiopia and the Sea and a few spots in the adjacent desert. It was one of the earliest seats of regular government, commerce, arts, and manufactures; but the greater part of its history before its conquest by the Persian king Cambyzes, B. C. 525, consists of lists of kings, whose chronological succession it is quite impossible to determine; and incredible fables. The names and exploits of a few of its sovereigns, in the latter part of that period, are, however, clearly ascertained; and some of the most interesting facts of their history are recorded in the Old Testament. And it was in these imperfectly-known times, that the pyramids, and other architectural marvels of Egypt, were built. For two hundred years after the invasion of Cambyzes, during which time it was a subject state of the Persian Empire, it was regarded as the foremost land for science and civilization. In 332, B. C., it was wrested from Persia by Alexander the Great; and under the Macedonian kings, called the Ptolemies, it reached its highest point of historic grandeur and renown. Under the Romans, from 30, B. C., as under the Persians, it retained all its intellectual supremacy; and it did not utterly fall until it was conquered by the Mohammedans under Amru, 638, A. D. Its great geographical divisions were the Thebaid (now Upper Egypt), Heptanomis (now Middle Egypt), and the Delta (now Lower Egypt), or the great alluvial level at the embouchures of the Nile. For further details see the names of its chief cities, &c.

Ælia Capitolina, a name given to Jerusalem by the Emperor Hadrian.

Ælian, Claudius, called "the Sophist," a Roman writer, who lived about 225, A. D. He wrote in Greek; and one of his works which we have is a collection of historical anecdotes, &c., and the other is about animals.

Ællo, the name of one of the Harpies.

Æmilian Way, one of the great Roman roads in Italy; it extended from Ariminum to Milan and Aquileja.

Æne'as, a legendary hero of Troy, son of Venus and Anchises, and married to Creusa. He is represented in the Iliad as one of the bravest and noblest of the defenders of Ilium; and his name was synonymous with filial piety, because he was said to have carried off his aged father on his own back from the flames of the city, when it was at length taken. According to Roman legends, after many wanderings, he found a settled home in Latium, where he became the remote ancestor of the Roman people.

Ænesidemus, a sceptical philosopher, who lived shortly before the Christian Era.

Æoles, one of the great Grecian families, the principal settlements of which were in Asia Minor, on the coast of the Ægean Sea.

Æolia, or Æolis, the maritime tract of Asia Minor, from Troas to the Cumæan Gulf, in which were the chief settlements of the Æolians. Their cities were banded together in a league; but in later times they were subject to Persia.

Æolia, a group of islands to the north of Sicily, now called the Lipara Isles.

Æolus, the legendary progenitor of the Æolian Greeks. He was represented as one of the sons of Hellen, the brother of Dorus, and uncle of Ion.—The legendary god of the winds, according to the later writers.

Æpytus, a legendary king of Messenia. He revenged the death of his father Cresphontes, and killed Polyphontes, who had usurped his throne.

Æqui, one of the old Italian tribes, which resisted so stoutly the supremacy of Rome. They were subdued in the beginning of the 4th century B. C., but rebelled and were completely subjugated 302, B. C.

Ærope, the wife of Atræus, and mother of Agamemnon and Menelaus. [Thyestes.]

Æsacus, a son of Priam, who threw himself into the sea, from grief at the death of Hesperia, and was changed into a bird.

Æschines, one of the great orators of Athens, and the rival of Demosthenes. He was born about 389, B. C., and after following various occupations, devoted himself to public affairs, and obtained such eminence as an orator, that in 477, B. C., he was appointed one of the ambassadors to Philip, king of Macedonia, to treat concerning peace. On his return he became the defender of Philip; and having been sent on a second embassy to his court, he exposed himself to an accusation of treason; which, however, he converted into a triumph by successfully charging his accuser, Timarchus, of immorality. Demosthenes, who was also his opponent in policy, repeated the accusation; but the charge was not tried until after the disastrous overthrow of Grecian freedom at Chæroneia in 338, B. C., when Ctesiphon proposed to reward the patriotism of Demosthenes, by the public presentation of a golden crown to him. For this he was accused by Æschines, and when the trial came on, in 330, B. C., Demosthenes undertook his defence. The result was the most complete defeat of Æschines, who immediately left Athens; and after a time opened a school for oratory at Rhodes. He died at Samos, 314, B. C. Several of his speeches have been preserved to our own day.

Æschylus, the grandest of all the tragic poets of Greece. He was born 525, B. C. He was personally engaged in the famous battles of Marathon, Salamis, and Platæa. He had then already devoted himself to the Muses; but not till he was 41 years old did he gain the tragic prize. He afterwards carried it off 12 times; but when it was given to his much younger rival Sophocles, 468, B. C., he went to Syracuse, to the court of Hiero, who was a liberal patron of learning. Once more he appears to have visited Athens; but he died in Sicily, at Gela, 456, B. C. It was said that he was killed by an eagle's letting fall a tortoise upon his bald head, mistaking it for a stone. Of his 70 tragedies, we have but 7 remaining; but 3 of them form one complete exhibition, which was called a Trilogy; and of the others, one is the Prometheus Bound, which is placed amongst the noblest examples of dramatic poetry.

Æsculapius, or Asclepius, the god of the healing art. There were various myths respecting him; but the most commonly received, represented him as the son of Apollo, and as killed by Jupiter, lest men should learn the secret of immortality. He was worshipped at Epidaurus, and the serpent was sacred to him. About 400, B. C., on occasion of a pestilence, his worship was introduced into Rome.

Æson, the father of Jason, who was made young again in extreme old age, by the enchantress Medea.

Æsopus, the celebrated writer of fables, who lived about 575, B. C. He was most probably born in Phrygia, in Asia Minor; and was a slave, until his master gave him his freedom. The inhabitants of Delphi were said to have killed him, by throwing him over a precipice. He did not write any of his fables, but very probably some of those that are common to all countries now, were of his invention.

Æsopus, Clau'dius, the most famous tragic performer of Rome, who lived in the earlier part of the 1st century B. C.

Æstui, the people who lived on the coast of the Baltic and used to sell amber to the traders from the Mediterranean.

Æthali'des, one of the Argonauts, whose spirit Pythagoras asserted to have transmigrated into himself.

Æthi'opes, the common name of all the very dark races of Africa, and Southern Asia; but particularly, the people who inhabited Æthiopia.

Æthio'pia, the country of eastern Africa, adjacent to Upper Egypt, on the south. It consisted of several different states or provinces, of which Meroë was the principal; but at a later period it was one kingdom, of considerable wealth and power. It never formed part of the Empire of Rome; but it appears to have been converted to Christianity in the very first years of the Christian Church. Some of its ancient monuments, which closely resemble those of Egypt, remain to this day.

Æt'na, the celebrated volcanic mountain on the eastern coast of Sicily. Under it, according to the ancient legends, Jupiter buried Enceladus, when he defeated the Titans; and there his thunderbolts were prepared by Vulcan and the Cyclopes. Several eruptions are spoken of in the period B. C.—A town of Sicily, at the foot of the volcano, built by the Catanæans, about 460, B. C. It was also called Inessa.

Æto'lia, a country of the mainland of Greece, lying between Epirus and the Corinthian Gulf, and between Acarmania and Locris. Very little is known about it until the later period of Grecian history, when it was the seat of a League, which at first was the antagonist of the Achæan League, but afterwards resisted both Macedonia and Rome. It never became so famous as the Achæan League; and it fell together with it; the country being included in the great Roman province of Achaia, in 146 B. C.

Ætolus, a legendary king of Elis, and founder of Ætolia, who was son of Endymion.

Afra'nus, a Roman comic writer, who lived about 100, B. C. Almost all his writings have been lost.—A military commander under Pompey, who was defeated by Julius Cæsar in Spain, in 49, B. C.; and who, sharing in the fall of his chief at Pharsalia, was at last taken and killed in Africa, in 46, B. C.

Africa, the southmost of the three great continents composing the Old World. It was called by the Greeks Libya. Little more than the northern or Mediterranean coast, and the countries immediately adjoining, were known to the ancients; who, nevertheless, believed that the ocean flowed to the south of it; and they said, that the Egyptian king, Pharaoh Necho, in the 6th century B. C., had caused his fleet to sail quite round it. Some travellers, of whom Herodotus heard in Egypt, appear to have penetrated farther south than the equator, for it was reported that they had seen the sun rise in the west, and set in the east. Egypt was the country of Africa with which the ancients were best acquainted. [See the names of other countries in Africa.]—The name of the Roman Province erected after the end of the Punic wars, 146, B. C., out of the territory of Carthage. It was one of the great corn-growing countries; and abounded in wealthy and populous cities, which will be noticed under their several names.

Agam'e'des, a famous architect of legendary times. With his brother Trophonius he was engaged in the erection of the temple of Apollo at Delphi, and of the treasury of king Hyrieus. One tale represents the god as rewarding their father's piety and skill by death, as the best gift to man: another says that they contrived the means of entering the treasury secretly for plunder, and that Agamedes being caught in a snare, in the treasury, Trophonius cut off his head, to prevent detection.

Agamem'non, the king of Mycenæ, who commanded the Greeks at the siege of Troy. He was the son of Atræus and brother of Menelaus. It was his daughter Iphigenia who was chosen as the victim of Diana, when the fleet was detained at Aulis. His quarrel with Achilles is the subject of the Iliad of Homer; which celebrates his wisdom and bravery. He was murdered by Ægisthus, with the assistance of his wife Clytemnestra, after his return from Troy; and his son Orestes revenged his death.

Aganippe, the nymph of a fountain of that name, at the base of Mount Helicon, consecrated to the Muses.

Agathocles, the tyrant of Syracuse, was the son of a potter, and learned that lowly craft. He was for a time a robber, and then a soldier, and, attracting the notice of his commander, was promoted by him, and afterwards enabled, by a fortunate marriage, to obtain great wealth. He now began his attempts to overthrow the constitution of his native city; and was twice banished by those who supported it. But having collected an army, he at length made himself master of Syracuse, 317, B. C., and secured his victory by the massacre of his opponents. His next efforts were directed to the subjugation of the whole island of Sicily, which involved him in a war with Carthage, and led to his invasion of Africa. In 306, B. C., he styled himself king; and he was afterwards engaged in various wars for the purpose of extending and confirming his power. He died 289, B. C., very probably from poison.

Agésilæus, one of the most famous kings of Sparta. He became king 399, B. C.; and from the year 396 to 394, commanded against the Persians in Asia Minor with great success. He defeated the other Grecian states which were allied against Sparta, at Coronea; and for several years maintained the supremacy of his state in Greece, by his arms. When Epaminondas, by his surprising victories, gained the supremacy for Thebes, Agésilæus could only keep Sparta itself from his power. He died in 361, B. C., in Egypt, whither he had gone to assist the native princes, who had rebelled against Persia.

Agis, the name of several kings of Sparta, one of whom, about 240, B. C., endeavoured to restore the institutions of Lycurgus; and was put to death by the Ephors, or supreme judges of the state.

Aglaiæ, the name of one of the Graces.

Agraulos, a mythical heroine of Athens, in whose temple the young citizens took their first oath of fidelity to their country in war.

Agriola, Cnæus Julius, a Roman commander, who was governor of Britain for 7 years, during which he greatly consolidated and extended the Roman conquests here. He first visited this country as a lieutenant to Suetonius Paulinus in 60, A. D.; but after being consul in 77, A. D., he was appointed governor. He put down Druidism, defeated the warlike tribes of Scotland, raised a great rampart across the island to restrain their attacks, and first of all sailed quite round the island. He largely assisted in civilizing, or Romanizing, the inhabitants, and was the wisest ruler recorded here before the days of the great Saxon kings. He died in 93, A. D., and his son-in-law Tacitus, the historian, believed that he had been poisoned by order of Domitian.

Agrirentum, a Greek city of Sicily, on the southern coast, founded early in the sixth century B. C., which flourished for a time; and had rulers famous for their cruelty and crimes, such as Phalaris; was destroyed by the Carthaginians, in 405; and built again, and was a place of some wealth and grandeur, when the Romans conquered it in 210, B. C. It is now called Girgenti.

Agrippa, Mar'cus Vipsanius, the favourite and friend of the Emperor Augustus, born 63, B. C.; who took part in most of the great events of his time, was married to the daughter of his great patron, and died 12, B. C.

Agrippina, the daughter of M. V. Agrippa, who was married to Germanicus Cæsar; and one of whose children was the Emperor Caligula. Tiberius banished her, because he hated and feared her, on account of her popularity, and she died in 33, A. D.—The daughter of Germanicus Cæsar, who was married first to Domitius Ahenobarbus, and afterwards to the Emperor Claudius. The Emperor Nero was her son by her first husband. She was one of those prodigies of crime which have made the history of Rome under the Empire so terrible. She was assassinated by the orders of her own son, in 59, A. D.

Ahenobarbus, Cnæus Domitius, a Roman who took part in the civil contests of the 1st century B. C. He was on the side of Pompey against Cæsar, he joined Brutus, after Cæsar's death, and he served under Antony in the East; but when the war broke out between him and Augustus he deserted to the other party, and died soon afterwards, of shame, as was said, in 31, B. C.—The husband of Agrippina, and father of the Emperor Nero.

Ajax, one of the Grecian heroes of the Trojan war, the son of Telamon of Salamis; whose strength and courage are celebrated in the Iliad. When the armour of Achilles was assigned to Ulysses, he lost his reason and killed himself.—Another hero of the same time; son of Oileus, king of Locris; famous for his swiftness of foot; who perished in a storm on his return to Greece, through the wrath of Neptune, because he had defiled the temple of Minerva.

Alani, one of the Tatar tribes which migrated from Asia in the 3rd century A. D.; and afterwards joined the Vandals in ravaging Spain and conquering Africa.

Alaric, king of the Goths, who was engaged through almost all the time of his appearance in history, in wars against the decaying Roman Empire. In 408, and 409, A. D., he twice besieged Rome; and the Emperors Attalus and Honorius owed their possession of the throne to him. In 410, A. D., he took and sacked the Imperial city; and soon afterwards died.

Alba Longa, the Latin city on the Alban Mount, not far from Rome, which was one of the first to fall before the power of the rising state. It was destroyed during the legendary times, when, as it was said, Tullus Hostilius was king.

Alba'nia, a country to the north of the Caucasian Mountains, near the Caspian Sea; where the Alans lived.

Albi'nus, Clo'dius, who was governor of Britain in 192, A. D., was declared Cæsar, or subordinate Emperor, by Severus, in the following year; but in 197, was defeated and killed by him in Gaul.

Al'bion, one of the names of Britain.

Al'bis, the river of Germany now called the Elbe.

Albu'nea, a nymph who presided over a grove and a fountain not far from Tibur in Italy.

Alcæ'us, a Grecian poet, born at Mytilene, who flourished near the end of the 7th century, B. C. He invented a lyrical metre, called after him Alcaic.

Alce'stis, the wife of Admetus.

Alcibi'ades, an Athenian famous for his beauty, his bravery, his political ability, his wealth, and his vices. He was the friend, but not the follower, of Socrates; a kinsman, but not an imitator, of Pericles. In early life he was remarkable for the ostentatious use of his riches, with which he sought to dazzle not Athens alone, but the whole Grecian world. Afterwards he entered on political life, showed himself equally energetic in war and in diplomacy, and raised himself to the head of the party he had espoused. He was the counsellor of the disastrous expedition against Syracuse, 415, B. C.; and would have been involved in it, had he not been accused of taking part in the mutilation of the Hermæ (terminal figures of Mercure, set up as guardians of the public streets), which occurred during the preparation of the expedition. He escaped to Sparta, and for some years acted in hostility to Athens, until, in 411 B. C., his sentence of banishment was reversed, and he was placed in command of the Athenian forces in Asia. Under him they gained several splendid victories, and took the cities of Chalcedon and Byzantium. He returned to Athens in 407, B. C., and was received most enthusiastically, as the saviour of his country. But in the next year, the fleet having been defeated at Notium, whilst he was absent, he was dismissed from the command. He continued to reside abroad, and after the final defeat of the Athenians at Ægospotamus, having been sentenced to banishment at home, he went over into Asia, to Pharnabazus, intending to visit Artaxerxes, king of Persia. But his house was attacked and set on fire one night, by a band of assassins, and he was killed. This happened in 404, B. C., when he was about 45 years old.

Alci'des, a name of Hercules.

Alcin'ous, the legendary king of the Phæacians, according to the Odyssey, who was visited by Ulysses in the course of his wanderings.

Al'ciphron, a Greek letter-writer, who lived near the end of the 2nd century A. D.

Al'cithoe, daughter of Minyas, who, according to the legend, was changed into a bat, for opposing the worship of Bacchus. Her sisters shared her fault and her punishment.

Alcmæ'on, son of Amphiaras and Eriphyle. He joined in the war against Thebes; and returning at the end of it, as the legend tells, killed his mother, as he had been commanded by his father. He was afterwards haunted by the Furies, until he was purified by Phegeus, whose daughter Alphesibæa he married. Being driven out of that land by the curse which visited it on account of his crime, he married Calirhoë, daughter of Achelous; but returning to fetch some presents he had given his former wife, he was killed by Phegeus.

Alcmæon'idæ, an Athenian family, which was banished on account of the death of Cylon, 612, B. C. They rebuilt the temple at Delphi, with great splendour; and were reinstated in Athens, in 510 B. C.

Alc'man, a lyric poet of Sparta, but a Lydian by birth, and a slave. He flourished in the 7th century B. C.

Alcmæ'na, daughter of Electryon, king of Mycenæ, and the wife of Amphitryon, who, according to the legend, was the mother of Hercules, by Jupiter. Her son by Amphitryon was named Iphicles.

Alcy'one, daughter of Æolus, and wife of Ceyx. Her husband having been drowned in a storm, she threw herself into the sea; but the gods changed them both into kingfishers; and hence, says the legend, calm weather which happens at the breeding time of these birds, is called halcyon days.

Alec'to, the name of one of the Furies.

Al'emanni, or Al'amanni, a Teutonic tribe which occupied Germany, and was continually at war with Rome, in the 3rd and 4th centuries A. D. They finally settled in that country, and thence it has been called by the French L'Allemagne.

Alexander, a king of Epirus, and uncle to Alexander the Great, who was defeated and killed near Pandosia in Italy, 326, B. C.

Alexander, surnamed the Great, the third king of Macedonia of this name, the son of Philip II. and Olympias, and born at Pella in the night on which the temple of Diana at Ephesus was burnt down by Herostratus, in 356, B. C. The philosopher Aristotle was engaged by his father as his teacher; and he evinced the most remarkable precocity of practical genius. When only eighteen, he distinguished himself at the battle of Chæronea, and secured the victory by his astonishing courage and ability. In 336, B. C., at the age of twenty, he became king on the murder of his father; and immediately made preparations to carry out the projected war against Persia. But he was compelled first to put his kingdom into a condition of safety, which he did by over-running Thrace, and striking terror into the barbarians who lived to the north of Macedonia, and beyond the Danube; and by inflicting upon Thebes the most appalling chastisement, destroying the city, and massacring, or selling into slavery, all its inhabitants. Early in 334, B. C., at the head of an army of less than 40,000 men, only 5000 being cavalry, he crossed the Hellespont into Asia; entirely defeated a Persian army on the Granicus, conquered all the western part of Asia Minor, and reached Gordium (where he cut the famous Gordian Knot, as an omen of his future successes) by the winter. Thence he advanced through Cilicia to Issus, where he routed Darius in person. Tyre detained him before it for more than half a year, till the summer of 332, B. C.; but Egypt offered no resistance. At the temple of Ammon, in the Libyan desert, he first asserted pretensions to divinity; and before leaving the country, he founded Alexandria. Marching thence in 331, B. C., he at length, in autumn, completely defeated and dispersed the Persian forces, at Arbela, and was master of the great Empire of the East, the ancient cities of which opened their gates to him. In the four following years he pushed his conquests still farther into the heart of Asia; and added Bactria, Sogdiana, and the region watered by the Indus, to his dominions. But his adoption of the manners and dress of Persia, his insufferable pride, and the ingratitude he showed to his most faithful servants (one of whom, Parmenion, he put to death on a false charge of treason), disgusted his troops, and he was compelled to retrace his steps. Sending his ships back by the Persian Gulf, he crossed Caramania, and arrived at Susa in 325, B. C. Thence he returned to Babylon; and after one short campaign, whilst revolving the most magnificent schemes for consolidating his conquests, and making the city of Babel the worthy capital of his wide realms, he was suddenly cut off by a fever, in the early summer of 323, B. C., in the thirty-third year of his age, and the thirteenth of his reign.

APPARERE NON FACIT ESSE.—TO APPEAR SO, DOES NOT PROVE A THING REALLY TO BE SO.

Alexandria, the capital of Egypt under the Macedonian kings, built by Alexander the Great, 322, B. C., on the coast of the Mediterranean in front of Lake Mareotis. Its position was chosen with such judgment, that it soon engrossed all the trade between Europe and the East, and being beautified and adorned by the earlier Ptolemies, it was long famed throughout the world for its splendour, its wealth, and the learning which was consequently attracted to it. It was taken by Julius Cæsar in the Alexandrian war, 47, B. C.; and its importance was diminished by the growth of the imperial city of Constantinople. But it retained much of its ancient renown till it was taken by Amru, 641, A. D. Its Lighthouse, on the island of Pharos, was one of the wonders of the world; and its Library was the most extensive that was ever collected in ancient times. Philosophy and theology were both studied with great diligence here, and amongst the many works which proceeded from it, the Septuagint, or Greek translation of the Old Testament, may be reckoned the most important of all. See the Gazetteer for an account of the modern city.

Algidus, a mountainous region, not far from Rome, which the Æquians usually occupied in their wars with the republic.

Alimentus, Lucius Cin'cius, a Roman historian, who lived near the end of the 3rd century B. C.

Al'lia, a river of Italy, running into the Tiber, on which the Romans were defeated by the Gauls, when they invaded the country under Brennus, 390, B. C.

Allobro'ges, a tribe of ancient Gauls, who lived between the Alps and the Rhone, and were reduced by Quintus Fabius Maximus, in 121, B. C. They disappear from history shortly after the wars of Cæsar in Gaul.

Alo'eus, legendary son of Neptune and Canace, whose wife, Iphimedia, had two sons by Neptune, Otus and Ephialtes (commonly called Aloëidæ), who were two of the most daring of the Titans in their wars against Jupiter. They once made the god Mars their prisoner for a long time; and in the war, though they were but nine years old, they nearly succeeded in taking Olympus by escalade, piling mountain on the top of mountain. They were killed by Apollo.

Alpes, the range of mountains, the loftiest in Europe, which completely encircle the northern extremity of Italy. Various names were giving to different portions of the range, as Maritime Alps, Cottian Alps, Graian Alps, Lepontine Alps, &c., most of which have been retained to the present day. They were inhabited by several fierce and hardy tribes, which long resisted the arms of Rome. Hannibal's passage of the Alps in as much celebrated in ancient history as that of Napoleon in modern times. But they were frequently crossed by armies afterwards. For their physical peculiarities, &c., see the Gazetteer.

Alphesibœ'a, daughter of Phegeus, married to Alcmæon, who (as the legend says) gave her, as a nuptial present, the necklace which Polynices had given to his mother, to induce her to betray her husband Amphiaraus.

Alphe'us, a river of Peloponnesus, which flows for part of its course under-ground; whence arose the legend of the river-god, called Alpheus, pursuing the nymph Arethusa, who was protected by Diana.

Althæ'a, daughter of Thestius, and wife of Æneus, according to the legends. She threw on the fire the billet of wood, on which the life of her son Meleager depended, when she heard that he had killed his uncles; and when he died in consequence, she killed herself.

Alyat'tes, father of Cræsus, and king of Lydia, early in the 6th century B. C. His tomb still remains in the neighbourhood of Sardis.

Amalthe'a, the mythical goat which was the nurse of Jupiter when an infant. Its horn which was broken off, became the Horn of Plenty. Both the goat and its horn were afterwards placed amongst the stars.

Amas'ia, a city on the river Iris, in Asia Minor, the capital of the kingdom of Pontus.

Amas'is, king of Egypt, 570, B. C.; who joined the revolters against Apries, and obtained his throne. He encouraged the Greek traders, and opened all the ports of the country to their ships, allowing them at the same time to build temples, &c. He died in 525, B. C., and Egypt was conquered by Cambyses of Persia.

Amas'tris, wife of Xerxes, king of Persia.—Daughter of Darius, king of Persia, married, finally, to Lysimachus, who had been one of the generals of Alexander the Great. She founded a city, called after herself, on the coast of the Euxine.

Am'azons, a legendary nation of female warriors, inhabiting the north-east part of Asia Minor. They were said to have invaded Greece, in the time of Theseus, and to have helped Priam, when his city was besieged by the Greeks. They were governed by a queen; Hippolyte was queen in the days of Hercules, and Penthesilea at the siege of Troy. The existence of this strange nation was so firmly believed, that they said Thalestris, their queen at the time, visited Alexander the Great during his triumphant march through Asia Minor. Later writers said that they allowed the visits of the Gargareans, once a year, for the purpose of keeping their nation in existence; and that they cut off the right breasts of all their female children, that they might be better able to use the bow, and sent away all the male children to the Gargareans. Greek sculpture has repeatedly treated of the combats between the Greeks and the Amazons.

Ambracia, a town of Epirus, on the north side of a gulf called, after it, the Ambracian Gulf. It was founded by Corinth about the middle of the 7th century, B. C., and for a long time was reckoned an Aeolian city. In the beginning of the 3rd century, B. C., it was given up to Pyrrhus of Epirus; and later in the same century it joined the Ætolian League. It was taken by the Romans in 89, B. C.; and when Augustus founded Nicopolis he removed the inhabitants of Ambracia into it.

Ambro'nes, a tribe of Gauls, who invaded the Roman territory, 102, B. C., in company with the Teutons and the Cimbrians, and were defeated by Marius at Aquæ Sextiæ.

Am'ida, a city in Greater Armenia, on the Tigris, the scene of many engagements between the Romans and the Persians in the later days of the Empire.

Ami'sus, a city of Pontus, in Asia Minor, on the Euxine.

Ammia'nus Marcelli'nus, a Roman historian, of the 4th century, A. D. He served under the emperor Julian the Apostate in his Persian war.

Am'mon, or Amu'n, a deity of Egypt, whose temple in an oasis in the Libyan Desert Alexander the Great visited, to claim the honour of being his son. He was regarded by the Romans and Greeks as the same as Jupiter.

Ampelu'sia, a promontory of Mauritania, near the Straits of Gades.

Amphiara'us, a mythic prophet and king of Argos. He was the son of Oicles and Hypermnestra, and married to Eriphyle, the sister of Adrastus. His wife persuaded him to join in the famous expedition against Thebes, having been bribed to do so by Polynices, who gave her the necklace of Harmonia. He foresaw his fate in this war, and commanded his men to revenge his death. See Alcæon. The earth opened and received him, as he fled from Perichlymenus, and he was made immortal, and afterwards worshipped in every part of Greece. There was a famous oracle on the spot where he disappeared.

Amphi'ctyon, the son of Dæcalion and Pyrrha; and the mythic founder of the celebrated Amphietyon Council, which used to meet every spring at Thermopylæ. This was the most important confederacy amongst the Greeks, and it existed till the overthrow of Grecian Liberty by Philip of Macedonia. Its fall was occasioned by Philip's obtaining a seat and a vote in it, although he did not belong to any one of the Hellenic races; but it lingered on till at least the 2nd century, A. D., after which it is heard of no more.

Amphiloch'ia, a part of the country of Acarmania, so called from the Amphilochians, who lived there.

Amphilochus, a legendary prophet, and one of the sons of Amphiaraus, who took part in the war with Thebes, and afterwards in the Trojan war. He also joined in the murder of his mother. He was killed at Mallos in Cilicia by Mopsus, a rival prophet, in consequence of some dispute about that town.

Amphi'on, with Zethus, twin-sons of Jupiter and Antiope. They attacked Thebes, and killed its king, Lycus, because he had put away their mother and married Dirce; whom they also killed with the greatest barbarity. They were said to have fortified Thebes by playing upon a lyre, which Mercury gave to Amphion. Niobe was the wife of Amphion, and when she and her numerous children were slain by Apollo, he killed himself.

Amphilip'olis, a Macedonian city, on the river Strymon, which almost encompassed it, whence the name. The Athenians planted a colony there in 437, B. C., and it was an object of fierce contention, on account of its importance, until it was taken by Philip, 358, B. C.; after which it has no place in history.

Amphis'sa, a town of the Ozolian Locrians, not far from Delphi. The inhabitants ventured to bring the Crissæan plain, which was consecrated to Apollo, into cultivation, and the Amphietyonic Council made war upon them for doing so; and destroyed their town in 338, B. C. It was afterwards rebuilt, and was taken by the Romans.

Amphitrite, the wife of Neptune, and presiding goddess of the sea, according to the most common legends. She is sometimes called a daughter of Nereus, and sometimes of Oceanus: Triton was one of her children.

Amphit'ryon, the son of Alcæus and Hippodome, and married to Alcmene. His history is a complete tangle of legends, closely resembling the northern fairy tales. His wife was the mother of Hercules by Jupiter; and his own son was named Iphicles. He was killed in a war with Erginus, king of Minyæ.

Amphrysus, a river of Thessaly, near which Apollo fed the flocks of Admetus.

Amy'clæ, a Lacedæmonian village, not far from Sparta. It was a place of some note before the Dorian conquest of Pelo- ponnesus; and Castor and Pollux were said to have been born there. But after it was taken by Teleclus, it lost almost all its importance.

An'ycus, a son of Neptune, and a great boxer, killed by Pollux, whom he had, according to his custom, challenged for the purpose of killing.

Amy'mone, one of the Danaiidæ, and mother of Nauplius by Neptune.

Amy'n'tas, king of Macedonia from 393 to 369, B. C. He assassinated Pausanias, and so obtained the crown; and he assisted the Spartans in the Olynthian war, but was careful to maintain peace with Athens. One of his sons was the celebrated Philip, who overthrew the freedom of Greece.

Amytha'on, the son of Cretheus, and father of Bius and Melampus.

Anachar'sis, a famous Scythian traveller, who visited Athens in the time of Solon, in the beginning of the 6th century, B. C.

Anac'reon, the celebrated lyric poet of Teos, who flourished in the latter part of the 6th and the beginning of the 5th century, B. C. Polycrates of Samos was his great patron; and he visited Athens when Hipparchus was in power there.

Anacto'rium, a town on the Ambracian Gulf, founded by the Corinthians, in the end of the 7th century, B. C. It was one of those depopulated by Augustus when he founded Nicopolis.

Anaxag'oras, the famous philosopher of Clazomene, in Ionia, who maintained the existence of a supreme deity as the cause of all things, and was in consequence accused by the Athenians of impiety, and fined and banished. He flourished throughout the greater part of the 5th century, B. C.

Anaxar'chus, a philosopher of Abdera, who was pounded to death in a mortar, by Nieocon, king of Cyprus, about 323, B. C.

Anaxare'te, a girl of Cyprus, whose lover hung himself before her house, because of her pride, and who was, according to the legend, changed into stone by Venus.

Anaximan'der, the successor of Thales, in the Ionian school of philosophy; and who flourished in the former half of the 6th century, B. C.

Anaxim'encs, the successor of Anaximander in the Ionian school of philosophy; who flourished in the latter half of the 6th century, B. C.

Anca'us, an Arcadian prince in the legendary times, who took part in the Argonautic expedition, and was killed in the hunt of the Calydonian boar.

Anchi'ale, a Cilician city, not far from the sea-coast, which the Assyrian king Sardanapalus was said to have built in one day along with Tarsus.

Anchi'ses, a Trojan prince, son of Capys and Themis. He was so beautiful that Venus loved him, and bore him a son, the brave and pious Aeneas. According to Virgil, he was rescued by his son at the sack of Troy, and accompanied him in his ocean wanderings; but other tales related that he perished because he boasted of the love of the goddess.

Anco'na, a city, standing on the eastern coast of Italy, founded by Syracuse, in the beginning of the 4th century, B. C. It was a considerable sea-port, on account of its fine harbour. For its modern history see the Gazetteer.

An'cus Mar'tius, the 4th king of Rome, according to the old legends; and grandson of Numa. He conquered the Latins, and is said to have forced them to settle on the Aventine Mount in Rome. He also fortified Mount Janiculum, and colonized Ostia; and reigned 24 years.

Ancy'ra, a city of Galatia, in Asia Minor; the capital of one of the Gallie tribes which settled there and peopled the country.

Ando'cides, a famous orator of Athens; who was implicated in the mutilation of the Hermæ, of which Alcibiades was accused; and who, to obtain his own discharge, accused various persons as guilty of the crime. He fell under the sentence of the law upon other occasions, and was banished again and again from Athens. He died soon after his last exile, about 392, B. C.

Andro'cles, a Roman slave, respecting whom is related a wonderful story of the gratitude of a lion. He is said to have extracted a great thorn from the foot of a lion, whilst he was living as a fugitive in Africa, and afterwards being captured, and sentenced to be thrown to the beasts, was recognised by this very lion, and saved in consequence.

Andro'geus, the son of Minos, king of Crete, and Pasiphae, who was killed by the Athenians, because he won all the prizes at their games. Minos, in consequence of this, as the legends say, attacked Athens, and forced it to send 7 young men and 7 young girls every year for the Minotaur. See Theseus.

Androm'ache, the wife of Hector, prince of Troy, daughter of Eëtion. At the taking of Troy, she was allotted to Neoptolemus, the son of Achilles; but some stories related that eventually she married Heliclus, brother to Hector, who was a petty king in Epirus.

Androm'eda, the daughter of Cepheus, king of Æthiopia, and his wife Cassiopea. Her mother boasted of her beauty as greater than that of the sea nymphs; for which, say the legends, a sea monster ravaged the country, until Cepheus should give up his daughter. She was delivered by Perseus, who slew the monster, and married her. Her former lover, Phineus, was killed at the marriage feast. Along with her father, her mother, and her husband, she found a place amongst the stars.

An'dros, one of the Cyclades, in the Ægean Sea; sacred to Bacchus, because it was so fruitful in wine.

An'gli, a Teutonic tribe, whose original seat was the western bank of the lower Elbe; who, under the foreign designation of Saxons, conquered and colonized Britain, after the Romans relinquished it, in the 6th century, A. D., and laid the foundation for the Anglo-Saxon race and Empire.

An'io, a river of Italy, which runs into the Tiber. It was the source of the supply of two of the aqueducts of Rome.

An'ius, son of Creusa, by Apollo, who became priest in the temple of the god at Delos.

An'na, sister of Dido of Carthage; who took refuge with Æneas in Italy, according to Virgil, after the self-immolation of her sister. But Lavinia being jealous of her, she drowned herself in the Numicius. There was an old Latin Naiad, called Anna Perenna, which Virgil thus identified with this legendary sister of the queen of Carthage.

Antæus, the gigantic son of Neptune and Tellus; whom Hercules killed in Libya (as the legends relate), holding him up by main strength and strangling him at the same time; for as long as he touched his mother Earth, his strength was inexhaustible.

Antal'cidas, a Spartan diplomatist, who negotiated the celebrated peace, called after him, in 287, B. C. By this treaty, Athens was robbed of almost all her colonies, whilst Sparta gave up scarcely anything; the Greeks in Asia were sacrificed to Persia, and Persia was made the arbiter of Grecian affairs, Sparta acting as her agent, and with her authority.

Antenor, a distinguished Trojan prince, son of Æsyetes, of great repute for wisdom. He was opposed to the retaining of Helen, when the Grecian ambassadors demanded her; and acted in concert with the Greeks at the end of the war. The legends which speak of his life after the fall of Troy are very contradictory.

Antias, Quintus Valerius, a historian of Rome, who flourished in the 1st century, B. C.

Anticlea, the mother of Ulysses, on account of whose long absence, after the fall of Troy, she died of grief.

Anticyra, a town of Thessaly, near which the hellebore was cultivated in great abundance; on which account the name of the town was synonymous with the means of curing madness.

Antigone, the daughter of Ædipus and Jocasta, who, according to the legend, would not forsake her father after his fate, and in his blindness, but remained with him till his death. Afterwards, when the burial of the bodies of her brothers was forbidden by Creon, she buried the body of Polynices, and was imprisoned in a subterranean cave, where she killed herself.

Antigonus, the One-eyed, king of Asia, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, who shared his Empire amongst them after his death. After a long succession of contests, he reached the object of his ambition; and proclaimed himself king of Asia, in 306, B. C. But fresh contests arose; and he, with his celebrated son Demetrius Poliorcetes, were defeated in the battle of Ipsus, in 301, B. C., and Antigonus was killed.

Antigonus Doson, king of Macedonia, by usurpation; was successful in his wars against Sparta and the Illyrians, and died in 220, B. C.

Antigonus Gon'atas, king of Macedonia, the son of Demetrius Poliorcetes, after a very unsettled reign, died in 239, B. C.

Antilib'anus, a mountain-ridge in Syria, running parallel to the ridge called Lib'anus, or Lebanon, but much higher.

Antilochus, the son of Nestor, who fell at the siege of Troy by the hand of Memnon.

Antimachus, a Greek poet, who flourished in the 5th century, B. C.

Antin'ous, a beautiful youth of Bithynia, the favourite of the Emperor Hadrian, who was accidentally drowned in the Nile; and placed by the Emperor amongst the gods, in 122, B. C.

Antioch'ia, the famous city of Syria in Asia, the capital of the Empire of the Seleucidæ, situated on the river Orontes, at a little distance from the sea. Seleucus Nicator founded it in 300, B. C., and named it after his father (or son) Antiochus. It became one of the most celebrated Greek cities in Asia, and when Christianity was first preached, it obtained a higher and purer fame. Its modern history is given in the Gazetteer.

Antiochus So'ter, king of Syria, son of Seleucus Nicator, and actual founder of the Empire of the Seleucidæ. He was greatly esteemed by his father; and he fell in battle against the Gauls, who had penetrated into Asia, in 261, B. C.

Antiochus the Great, king of Syria, from 224 to 187, B. C. During his reign he was engaged in hostilities against the Ptolemies of Egypt, against the newly-formed Greek Empires of Parthia and Bactria, and against Rome. Being defeated by Ptolemy Philopator near Gaza, 217, B. C., he lost the whole of Palestine, Phœnicia, and the country called Cœle-Syria; but about 20 years afterwards he recovered them, and gave them to the young king Ptolemy Epiphanes, who had married his daughter Cleopatra. The contest with Parthia and Bactria was long, but fruitless. It was not difficult to gain victories; but he could not recover the territories which had been wrested from his empire. With Rome he was most unfortunate. Incited to attack the rising mistress of the world, by the great Carthaginian general Hannibal, who had sought and found a refuge in Asia, when his reverses had made his country forgetful of his former glory, Antiochus did not at once act on his determination; nor when he commenced action did he strike at Rome itself. He attempted to reach Italy through Greece, was defeated there in 191, B. C., on the memorable field of Thermopylæ; was defeated again in the following year, in Asia Minor, whither the victorious Romans had followed him, and lost all Asia Minor, beside having to pay the cost of the war. Antiochus was murdered in 187, B. C., by the people of Elymais, from whom he had hoped to gain some means of paying the Romans.

Antiochus Epiph'anes, king of Syria from 176 to 164, B. C., the son of Antiochus the Great. He made war on Egypt, on account of Palestine and Cœle-Syria, and would have conquered Egypt itself, if the Romans had not interfered, and by their ambassador Popillius Leenas forbidden him to pursue his advantages. His oppression of the Jews led to their revolt under the Maccabees. He also attempted to plunder the temples in Elymais, and became a furious madman, and so died.

Anti'ope, the daughter of Nycteus, and mother of Amphion and Zethus.—An Amazon, sister of Hippolyte, brought to Theseus by Hercules.

Antip'ater, the Regent of Macedonia during the expedition of Alexander the Great into Asia. After the death of Alexander, he, with Craterus, received the command of Greece, and when the Greeks revolted in the hope of regaining their freedom, he defeated them at Crannon, in 322, B. C. In 320, B. C., he took on himself the office of Regent, and died in the same year.

Antip'ater, Procurator of Judæa for the Romans from 47 to 43, B. C. He received this appointment from Julius Cæsar; and died from poison in the last-mentioned year. He was the father of Herod the Great.

Antip'ater, Lu'cius Cæ'lius, a Roman historian, who flourished in the 2nd century, B. C.

Antip'phon, an Athenian orator, who took a prominent part in the revolution which overthrew the democracy, and set up the Council of Four Hundred: for which, when the counter-revolution occurred, in the same year, he was tried and put to death.

Antisthenes, the founder of the Cynics. He was a pupil of Socrates, and a violent opponent of Plato; and he flourished in the middle of the 4th century, B. C., at Athens.

Anti-tau'rus, a mountainous range in Cappadocia, in Asia Minor.

Antium, a town of Latium, in Italy.

Anto'nia, the name of two daughters of Mark Antony and Octavia; the elder married to Domitius Ahenobarbus; the younger, to Drusus, brother of Tiberius, afterwards Emperor.

Antoninus Pius, Emperor of Rome from 138 to 161, A. D. He was the adopted son of Hadrian, and was one of the best Emperors that Rome ever had.

Anto'nus, Mar'cus, commonly called Mark Antony, the triumvir of Rome. He was a warm friend of Julius Cæsar, and hastened the conflict between him and Pompey in 49, B. C. He took part in the battle of Pharsalia; and after Cæsar's assassination, hoped to succeed to his authority in Rome; but he was compelled to form an alliance with Octavian (Augustus) and Lepidus; which was called the Triumvirate. The defeat and destruction of the party of Brutus and Cassius at Philippi in 42, B. C., followed. In the division of the Empire which was afterwards made, he received the East, where he was successful in some wars against the Parthians and Armenians; but threw away the possibility of keeping his ground against Octavian, for the sake of Cleopatra, the queen of Egypt, with whom he lived in the greatest pomp and luxury at Alexandria. He was at length defeated by his cooler rival at Actium, in 31, B. C., and shortly afterwards killed himself.

Anu'bis, an Egyptian divinity, represented as a man with a dog's head.

Ao'nides, a name of the Muses, from the old designation of the country in which Mount Helicon stood.

Apel'les, the most famous painter of Greece, who flourished in the latter half of the 4th century, B. C. He was the only painter whom Alexander the Great allowed to paint his likeness.

Apenninus, the name of the mountain-range running throughout Italy, and joining the Alps against the Ligurian Sea.

Aphrodi'te, the Greek goddess of love and beauty, who is better known by the name Venus, which the Roman goddess bore.

Apic'ius, the name of several famous gluttons at Rome; one of whom consumed all his property in eating and drinking, and then hanged himself.

A'pis, one of the gods of Egypt, worshipped under the form of a bull at Memphis.

Apol'lo, the Greek god of poetry, music, science, &c., and of the sun. He was the son of Jupiter and Latona, and his twin sister was Diana. They were born in Delos, where their mother had fled from the jealousy of Juno. The Muses were his daughters. The mythic stories of him are numerous; and they tell how he slew the great serpent Python with his arrows; how he was once expelled from Olympus, and became a herdsman to Admetus in Thessaly; how Marsyas contended with him in musical skill; how he scattered pestilence amongst the people with his bright arrows, &c. As the sun-god he was also called Phæbus. The Romans borrowed the worship of Apollo, and his history, from the Greeks.

Apollo'nia, a city of Illyria, which was, during the 1st century, B. C., famous both for trade and for learning.

Apollo'nus of Tyana, a philosopher, who flourished during the 1st century, A. D. He himself, or his disciples (for the sake of opposing the progress of Christianity) for him, laid claim to miraculous powers and prophecy. He was a great traveller, and died at Ephesus.

Ap'pian Road, one of the great public roads of Italy, running from Rome to Brundisium.

Appia'nus, a Roman historian, who flourished in the 2nd century, A. D.

A'pries, king of Egypt in the early part of the 6th century, B. C. In the Old Testament he is called Pharaoh Hophra.

Apule'ius, a philosophic romance writer of the 2nd century, A. D., to whom we are indebted for the exquisite myth of Cupid and Psyche.

Apu'lia, the south-eastern part of Italy, which was colonized chiefly by Illyrians, and was subjugated by Rome near the end of the 4th century, B. C.

Aqua Sæ'tica, a town in Narbonnensian Gaul, famous for its mineral springs; now called Aix. [See Gazetteer.] Near it Marius defeated the Teutons and their allies, in 102, B. C.

Aquile'ia, a city of that part of Italy called Cisalpine Gaul, on the coast at the most northerly part of the Adriatic; which was a place of great importance under the Empire, but is now only a village.

Aquita'nia, a Roman Province of Gaul, lying next the Pyrenees.

Ara'bia, the country in the southwest angle of Asia, which still bears that name. It was divided into Arabia Felix, which was the tract of inhabited country along the west and south coasts; Arabia Petræa, which was the mountainous region about the extremity of the Red Sea; and Arabia Deserta, which was the desert region in the northern and central part.

Arach'ne, a Lydian girl, who dared to compete with Minerva in weaving, and was turned (as the legends say) into a spider.

Aracho'sia, a province of the Parthian Empire, lying on the Upper Indus, at present called Cabulistan, Candahar, &c. See Gazetteer.

Ara'tus, a Greek astronomical poet of the 3rd century, B. C., whose works were translated into Latin by Cicero.—The most famous general and diplomatist of the Achæan League in and after 295, B. C. He first gave the League power in Greece, by his high character and his great ability: and he was poisoned by the contrivance of Philip, king of Macedonia, in 213, B. C.

Arax'es, a river of Asia, flowing into the Caspian.

Arba'ces, the founder of the Empire of the Medes; who conquered and destroyed the Assyrian Empire about 875, B. C.

Arbe'la, a city of Assyria, near which Darius was finally overthrown by Alexander the Great, in 331, B. C.

Arca'dia, a country of Peloponnesus, whose people took no part in any of the great events of Grecian history, until the latest times, when they joined the Achæan League. Their principal city was called Megalopolis.

Arca'dius, Emperor of the Eastern half of the Roman Empire, from 395 to 408, A. D.

Ar'cas, son of Jupiter and Calisto; afterwards changed into the Little Bear.

Arcesila'us, a Platonic philosopher, who flourished at Athens in the 3rd century, B. C.

Archela'us, son of Herod the Great, who was made ruler of Judæa, Samaria, &c., at his father's death; but was afterwards, in 7, A. D., banished to Gaul.

Ar'chias, a Greek poet, who lived at Rome in the earlier part of the 1st century, B. C.

Archil'ochus, a Greek poet, who invented Iambic verses, and a style of poetry called by his name. He flourished about the beginning of the 7th century, B. C.

Archime'des, the most celebrated mathematician and engineer of ancient times, whose defence of Syracuse, when it was besieged by the Romans, from 214 to 212, B. C., is one of the most remarkable passages in history. He was killed by a soldier when the city was taken.

Arela'te, a city of Gaul, now called Arles. See Gazetteer.

Are's, the Greek name of the god of war, called by the Romans Mars.

Arethu'sa, the nymph who is mentioned in the legend of Alpheus.

Arginu'sæ, a cluster of small islands off

Lesbos, near which the Athenian fleet defeated the Spartan's, in 406, B. C.

Ar'gonauts, the crew of the ship Argo, in which Jason went to Colchis to obtain the golden fleece. It was one of the most famous of the old Grecian legends.

Ar'gos, the country of Peloponnesus in Greece lying between Corinth and Lacedæmon; with a capital of the same name. It was most famous in the mythic and heroic ages; Phidon is its great historic king. Afterwards it generally acted under the control of Sparta; until it joined the Achæan League, whose fortune it then followed.

Ar'gus, the hundred-eyed guardian of Io, after she had been turned into a cow; killed by Mereury.

Ariad'ne, daughter of Minos, by whose help Theseus killed the Minotaur; and who, being deserted by him at Naxos, was married, according to the legends, by Bacchus himself.

Aria'na, the eastern portion of the old Persian Empire, now Beloochistan, &c. See Gazetteer.

Arimas'pi, a fabulous one-eyed people of Scythia, engaged in a perpetual war with griffins, respecting the gold of their land.

Arimi'num, a city of Italy, now Rimini.

Ari'on, a famous player on the harp, who (according to the story) lived in the 7th century, B. C.; and having been thrown overboard by some sailors, for the sake of his wealth, was borne to the shore by a dolphin.

Aristar'chus, a grammarian of Alexandria, who flourished in the 2nd century, B. C., and was celebrated as a critic of Homer's poems.

Aristi'des, the Athenian, who was sur-named the Just. He had held the highest posts in the state, before he was banished, according to the custom at Athens (when political rivalry ran high), by ostracism, in 483, B. C. But he did such good service during the battle of Salamis, that he was recalled; and afterwards he secured the leadership in the Grecian confederacy for his country. He died in 468, B. C.

Aristip'pus, a Greek philosopher, who founded the Cyrenaic School, in the former part of the 4th century, B. C.

Aristode'mus, a legendary hero and king of the Messenians; who killed his daughter, when a sacrifice to the gods was demanded by the oracle; and who afterwards slew himself, in despair for his country.

Aristom'enes, the great Messenian hero, who boldly, and for a long time successfully, resisted the Spartans in the 3rd war. His history is so mixed with legend, as to be in good part incredible.

Aristoph'anes, the greatest comic poet of antiquity. He flourished during the latter part of the 5th and the beginning of the 4th century, B. C., at Athens. In his famous comedies of the Clouds, the Knights, the Birds, the Wasps, the Frogs, &c., he ridiculed, with unsparing fun, Socrates and the philosophers, Cleon, Pericles, and the politicians, the Expedition against Sicily, the everlasting lawsuits at Athens, the expedients for bringing about a peace with Sparta, the tragic poets, &c.

Aristot'eles, the celebrated philosopher of Stagira. He studied at Athens, under Plato; and there he taught, after Alexander the Great, who was his pupil, had become the despot of Greece; and founded a new school, called the Peripatetic, because his lectures were given whilst he "walked about" in the Lyceum. He was a most extraordinary man for the extent of his knowledge, and wrote not only on Metaphysics, Morals, Rhetoric, and Logic, but on Natural History also; and his writings have exercised a greater influence over human learning than those of any other author of ancient or modern times. In consequence of the patronage he had always enjoyed from Philip and his son, he was compelled to flee from Athens, on Alexander's death, and he died in Eubœa, in 322, B. C., aged sixty-two years.

Armenia, a country lying to the west of the Caspian Sea, and between Assyria, Syria, Asia Minor, and Scythia. It formed part of the great empire of the Seleucidæ, but in the decline of their power, made itself independent; and so remained until one portion of it, called Lesser Armenia, was subjugated by the Emperor Vespasian, in 72, A. D.; whilst the possession of Greater Armenia was contested by Rome and Parthia, or Persia, until the establishment of the kingdom of the Sassanidæ, in the former part of the 3rd century, A. D.

Armin'ius, a German warrior, who long resisted the Roman power, in the beginning of the 1st century, A. D. He destroyed the army of Varus; but was not successful against Germanicus: and was finally killed by his own countrymen.

Armor'ica, the ancient name of Bretagne, in France.

Arret'ium, an important city of Etruria, in Italy.

Arria'nus, a Greek historian, of the 2nd century, A. D., who wrote an account of the Expedition of Alexander the Great.

Arsa'ces, the founder of the Empire of Parthia, after whom all the kings of his dynasty were called Arsacidæ.

Arsin'oë, the name of several eminent females of the family of the Ptolemies in Egypt, the first of whom was the mother of Ptolemy Lagus.

Artaba'zus, the Persian general who was left with Mardonius to attempt the conquest of Greece, in 480, B. C.

Artapher'nes, one of the Persian generals who was defeated at the battle of Marathon, in 490, B. C.

Artaxerxes Mnémon, king of Persia, from 405 to 359, B. C. His brother Cyrus attempted first to dethrone him; and afterwards his son Darius conspired against him, and was punished with death. He was engaged in perpetual wars, but did not achieve any marked successes.

Ar'temis, the Grecian name for the goddess Diana.

Artemis'ia, queen of Caria, who commanded the Carians when Xerxes invaded Greece, in 481, B. C.—Another queen of Caria, who built the Mausoleum, which was one of the seven wonders of the world.

Arver'ni, a tribe of Aquitanian Gauls, who were finally subjugated by Cæsar, in 52, B. C.

Ascal'aphus, son of Acheron and Nox, turned into an owl by Ceres, because, according to the legend, he disclosed the fact that Proserpine had eaten some pomegranate seeds, when Pluto had carried her off into the lower world.

As'calon, a city on the coast of Palestine, to the north of Gaza.

Asca'nus, called also Iulus, the son of Æneas, according to Virgil, by Creusa; but according to others who have related the legend, of Lavinia.

Asclépius, the Greek name of Æsculapius.

As'era, a city of Bœotia, which, as the legends said, was built by Ephialtes and Otus.

A'sia, now the name of the great eastern continent of the Old World, in ancient times signified, at first, no more than the Asiatic coast of the Ægean Sea, and the parts immediately adjacent inland; and the name was borrowed from a mythic daughter of Oceanus and Tethys. It was employed in this restricted sense, occasionally at least, as late as the time when the Apocalypse of John was written, as the mention of the 7 Churches of Asia shows. But the name was applied more and more widely, as the countries and the people of the East became better known to Europeans, and the need of a common name was felt. The parts of this continent which were well known, were Asia Minor, Assyria, Persia, and part of Arabia; the north-western parts of India, Cabul, and the countries lying next the Caspian, on the east, south, and west, with the rest of Arabia, were partly known; and the most uncertain and unsatisfactory reports and legends prevailed respecting the remainder, of the extent and configuration of which the ancients were totally ignorant. The various countries comprised in it will be treated of separately.

A'sia Mi'nor, the most westerly part of Asia, and for a time the only part called by that name. The countries contained in it, and its great natural features, will be described, each under its own name.

Aso'pus, a river of Sicyon, said in the mythic stories to have been originally a son of Oceanus and Tethys, and so changed for his rebellion against Jupiter.

Aspa'sia, an exceedingly beautiful and learned woman of Miletus, who settled at Athens, and became (though not legally, because the Athenian law did not permit the marriage of its natives with those of other places) the wife of Pericles. The women of Athens were systematically left ignorant, domestic drudges and mothers of families; Aspasia was highly accomplished, and so well able to teach, that Socrates himself was not ashamed to learn of her; she was in consequence accused of impiety, but, through the influence of Pericles, acquitted. After his death, she is said to have married a dealer in cattle.

Asphalt'ites La'cus, or the Dead Sea, the southern lake of Palestine, into which the Jordan flows.

Assar'acus, a mythic king of Troy, son of Tros, and grandfather of Anchises.

Assy'ria, the great Asiatic Empire, whose capital was Nineveh; but more properly, the country also called Mesopotamia and Babylonia, or, in its most restricted sense, the tract lying to the east of the Tigris, and north of Babylonia, the principal part of which was afterwards known as Adiabene. The Empire of Assyria, according to the best and latest authorities, lasted, though with some changes, from 1273 to 625, or 606, B. C.

Astar'te, one of the names of Venus, derived from the Syrian deity of Ashtaroth.

As'ter, the famous archer of Amphipolis, who was said (during the siege of that city by Philip of Macedonia) to have discharged an arrow at him, inscribed "To Philip's right eye"; and to have blinded him with it. The story adds that Philip caused the shaft to be returned, with a promise to hang the too dexterous bowman, and to have kept the promise when he took the place.

Ast'eria, the daughter of Cœus, who, being loved by Jupiter and rejecting him, was turned (according to one of the legends) into a quail.

Astræ'a, the daughter of Jupiter and Themis, who was goddess of justice, and lived on earth in the Golden Age, and afterwards was made the constellation Virgo.

Astræ'us, a Titan, who was said by the legends to have married Aurora, and to be the father of the winds.

Ast'ures, a people of Spain, whose country was afterwards called Asturia.

Asty'ages, the last king of Media, whom Cyrus deposed, in 559, B. C.

Asty'anax, the son of Hector and Andromache, who was said to have been killed by Neoptolemus.

Atalan'ta, the daughter of Iasus and Clymene (according to some legends), who took part in the famous hunt of the Calydonian boar. Meleager presented the boar's head to her when he killed it. Her father required of those who sought her hand that she should be surpassed in running; and Milantion (or Hippomenes, as other tales said) outstripped her by the help of the golden apples which Venus gave him. Both she and her husband, the legend adds, were turned into lions.

A'te, a goddess, daughter of Jupiter, who was banished to earth, where she incited men to evil, and punished them also.

Atel'la, a city of Campania in Italy, not far from Neapolis.

Athama'nia, a country of Northern Greece, between Thessaly and Epirus.

Ath'amas, the son of Æolus and Enarete, king of Orchomenus, who married Nephele, and was the father of Phrixus and Helle. He had Learehus and Melicertes by Ino; and being driven mad by Juno, killed Learchus, and fled into Thessaly.

Ath'ensæ, or Athens, the capital of Attica in Greece, and one of the most famous cities of antiquity. It stood upon the river Ilissus; and inclosed within its walls the hills called Acropolis, Areopa- gus, Lycabettus, Museum, and Pnyx. It was above 4 miles distant from its ports Piræus, Munychia, and Phalerum, with which it was connected by what were called the Long Walls. Its grandest buildings were the temples of Minerva, called the Parthenon, and of Erectheus, in the Acropolis; the temples of Jupiter and of Theseus; the theatre of Bacchus, the Odeum of Pericles, and that built by Herodes Atticus, the Stadium, &c., &c. During the period of the freedom of Greece, it was the foremost city in the world; freedom, arts, and learning, with a considerable proportion of the existing commerce, finding their centre in it; and its celebrity and services in arts and learning survived through long centuries the fall of Grecian freedom, and the diversion of trade to new channels. The time of its greatest splendour in every respect was when Themistocles (and Pericles after him) had more than retrieved the sacrifices of the Persian war. Devotion to the cause of Greece raised it; it fell through its selfishness; being crushed by Sparta and Macedonia, which were more selfish still. Its history will be found under the names of its great warriors, orators, poets, &c., and for its modern condition see the Gazetteer.

Ath'ene, a Grecian name of Minerva, under which she was the tutelary deity of Athens.

Athenæ'us, a Greek grammarian of Alexandria and Rome, who flourished in the 3rd century, A. D. His great work, called Deipnosophistæ, still remains.

Athenodo'rus, a philosopher of the stoical school, called Cananites, a teacher and friend of the Emperor Augustus.

Ath'esis, a river of Italy, now the Adige.

A'thos, a celebrated mountain of Macedonia, standing on a peninsular promontory, across the isthmus of which Xerxes constructed a canal, when he invaded Greece the second time, in 480, B. C.

Atlan'tis, a legendary island in the ocean, without the Pillars of Hercules; which has been variously supposed to be the Azores, the Canary Islands, the British Islands, or the West Indies; but was, most probably, purely imaginary.

At'las, one of the Titans, whose parentage is differently stated in different legends, but who is represented in the oldest stories as holding up the heavens on his shoulders, or keeping the earth and heaven asunder. Subsequent writers said he was a man whom Perseus with the head of Medusa changed into a mountain, for his inhospitality; and that mountain was supposed to be in north-western Africa. The Pleiades and Hyades were his daughters.—The mountain-range in Africa still bearing this name.

Atreba'tes, a Celtic tribe, part of which lived in Gaul, in the part afterwards called Artois, and the others in England, parts of Oxfordshire, Berkshire, Surrey, and Hampshire; Silchester being their chief city.

A'treus, the mythic king of Mycenæ, son of Pelops and Hippodamia, and father of Agamemnon and Menelaus. His history, as related by the ancient legends, is full of horrors. His wife was seduced by his brother Thyestes; he killed his own son Plisthenes; and he killed and dressed for the table his brother's two sons, and set them before him at a banquet. He was at last killed by a son of his third wife, Ægisthus, whom she bore to her own father, his brother Thyestes.

Atrides, the common patronymic of Agamemnon and Menelaus.

Atropos, one of the three Fates.

At'talus, the name of three kings of Pergamus, all of whom were famous for their wealth, and their patronage of art and literature. They were all friendly to the Roman people, and the third, named Philometor, when he died, in 133, B. C., left his kingdom to them; and this was their first possession in Asia.

At'tica, the territory of Greece of which Athens was the capital. It was more celebrated for its capital than for anything else: but it was prolific in figs and olives; and it had mines of silver at Laurium, quarries of statuary marble at Mount Pentelicus; and honey, that was famed throughout the ancient world, on Mount Hymettus.

At'ticus Pompo'nus, a friend of Cicero, and a person of great wealth and elegant learning. He took no part in the stirring political events of his day, and died in 32, B. C.

At'tila, the king of the Huns, who was called "the Scourge of God." Between the years 445 and 452, A. D., he ravaged most fearfully both the great divisions of the Empire; and at last menaced Rome itself; but from this he allowed himself to be persuaded, and he died in the following year, 453, A. D.

A'tys, a Phrygian shepherd, beloved (say the legends) by Cybele; and afterwards changed into a fir-tree.

Au'geas, the king of Elis, whose stable was cleansed by Hercules.

Augustulus Rom'ulus, the last Emperor of Rome, deposed by Odoacer, in 476, A. D.

Augustus, called also Cai'us Octa'vius, or Octavia' nus, the founder of the Empire of Rome, born 63, B. C., was a nephew of Julius Cæsar, but does not appear in history till after his death in 44, B. C. Having frustrated Antony's scheme of making himself Cæsar's successor, he next combined with him and Lepidus, and formed what was called the triumvirate. The security of their power at Rome was purchased by the indiscriminate slaughter of all whose influence or ability could possibly endanger it; and then Brutus and Cassius were defeated and destroyed at Philippi. Disputes next arose between Augustus and Antony, varied by wars, alliances, and reconciliations, until the final defeat of Antony at Actium, in 31, B. C., made Augustus master of the world. Few wars disturbed the tranquillity of his reign, which continued for more than forty years; and those were merely for the safety of the frontiers of his empire. The temple of Janus was shut. Arts and letters flourished, having found in Augustus a munificent patron. Commerce and the arts of life were encouraged and prospered; and at no period were wealth and happiness more widely diffused in the civilized world. Augustus was absolute ruler, but he maintained the senate, and formally based his authority upon it. Although he was the first Emperor, he was not so in the same sense as his successors, who governed as undisguised despots. Although he was several times married, he had no heirs to succeed him; and the sons of his daughter Julia died before him; so he adopted the son of his wife Livia, Tiberius, and he became Emperor in his room. Augustus died in 14, A. D.

Aurelia' nus, Emperor of Rome from 270 to 275, A. D., was the conqueror of the celebrated Zenobia, queen of Palmyra; and of Tetricus, who had raised Spain, Gaul, and Britain into a separate empire for himself. But he gave up Dacia, and brought back the frontier of the Empire to its primitive position. He was assassinated whilst preparing to march against the Persians.

Aure'lius Anton'i' nus, Mar'cus, the philosopher, Emperor of Rome from 161 to 180, A. D. He rose to the purple through being adopted by Antoninus Pius, at the same time that Hadrian adopted him; and he shared his throne with his brother by adoption, Lucius Aurelius Verus. Whilst Verus carried on war against the Parthians, Aurelius contended with the Germanic tribes, not without marked success. It was in this war that, according to the legends of the church, the Miracle of the Thundering Legion (which being, it is said, mainly composed of Christians, was, in answer to its prayer, aided by a terrific storm in a battle with the barbarians) occurred. Aurelius was a better prince than most of those who wore the imperial diadem of Rome. A work of a philosophical character written by him is still extant.

Auro'ra, the goddess of the dawn, or the morning. Her parentage is differently stated by different writers; but her husband was Tithonus, and amongst her sons was Memnon.

Auso'nia, an ancient name of Italy.

Auso'nius, Dec'imus Mag'nus, a Roman poet who flourished in the 4th century, A. D.

Au'ster, the deity who presided over the S. wind.

Autoch'thones, another name for the people called Aborigines.

Autol'ycus, a son of Mercury, and grandfather of Ulysses, celebrated for his thefts.

Autom'edon, the charioteer of Achilles.

Aver'nus, a lake of the volcanic district of Italy, from whose waters arose most pestilential vapours. Its name was given, in consequence, to one of the fabulous rivers of the infernal regions.

Avie' nus, Ru'sus Festus, a Roman poet of the 4th century, A. D.

Ax'ius, the chief river of Macedonia.

Azo'tus, a maritime city of Palestine; in the Scriptures called Ashdod.

BAB'YLON, one of the oldest and greatest cities of antiquity, standing on the Euphrates, in that part of Assyria called Babylonia. Its form was square, each side being nearly 14 miles long; and its walls were of brick, but excessively massive and high. The temple of Belus, and the hanging gardens, were among the wonders of the world,—the former being the origin of all the popular notions of the tower of Babel. Babylon was the seat of a powerful empire from the earliest dawn of history to 1273, B. C., when the Assyrian Empire arose; and it was again the mistress of the world, from 747 to 533, B. C., when the city was taken, and the empire overthrown by Cyrus. Alexander the Great contemplated the reconstruction of it; but his death prevented the scheme from being completed. It gradually dwindled away, until in about the 6th century, A. D., it had become as complete a desolation as it is at the present day. Recent investigations have thrown great light upon the history of this wonderful city.

Bac'chus, the god of wine, the fabled son of Jupiter and Semele. He was brought up by the nymphs on Mount Nysa; and when he grew up, was driven by the jealousy of Juno, from land to land, all over the East. But he carried endless blessings with him for mortals, and was recognised as a divinity in almost every place. Prodiges terrified and punished those who were unwilling to own the god. Ariadne was the best loved of all of whom he was enamoured. His usual companions are Silenus, Fauns, Satyrs, and Bacchantes; and he is drawn by tigers, lynxes, or panthers. The goat is sacred to him. He is crowned with vine or ivy; and his sceptre is a thyrsus.

Bacchy'lides, a Greek lyric poet, of the 5th century, B. C.

Bac'tra, the capital of the kingdom of Bactria.

Bac'tria, a Greco-Asiatic kingdom, formed out of the Empire of the Seleucidae, which flourished from 255 till about 130, B. C. Very little is known of its history.

Bai'æ, a favourite place of resort from Rome, situated in Campania, on a bay called by its own name. Thermal springs rose near the town, and formed great part of its attractions.

Balea'res, the three islands now named Majorca, Minorca, and Ivica. Their inhabitants were considered the most expert slingers in the world.

Bar'bari, the name by which the Greeks distinguished all nations not of Hellenic origin.

Bar'ca, a city of Cyrenaica, in Africa, which maintained itself in a condition of semi-independency, during the short time that it was in a flourishing condition in the 6th century, B. C.

Barsi'ne, a daughter of Darius, called also Statira, whom Alexander the Great married after her father's death. She was murdered by Roxana in 324, B. C.

Bata'vi, a people of Gaul, who lived at the mouth of the Rhine, and were subdued by Rome in the course of the 1st century, A. D.

Bal'tus, a shepherd, turned into stone by Mercury, for deceit.

Bau'cis and Phile'mon, a poor old couple in Phrygia, who once upon a time hospitably entertained Jupiter and Mercury, and were rewarded for their piety, both dying at the same time and being turned into trees.

Ba'vius and Mæ'vius, two sorry poets, who criticised the poetry of Horace and Virgil, and are remembered because the former resented it.

Bel'esis, the priest of Babylon, who assisted Arbaces in overthrowing the Empire of Media.

Bel'gæ, a Celtic people, who occupied the north-eastern part of Gaul, and the central part of the southern coast of Britain. Those on the continent yielded to the arms of Cæsar; but not without a fierce struggle. The present city of Winchester was the capital of those in Britain.

Belisa'rius, the celebrated Roman general of the reign of Justinian, who by his splendid victories in Asia, Italy, and Africa, renewed the ancient glories of Rome in the hour of her irrecoverable decline. He was the last subject of Rome honoured with a triumph; and the only one, throughout the latter part of the Empire. Having restored the glory of the Emperor by his skill and courage, he was discarded, and died in indigence, in 565, A. D. He is commonly said to have been blinded also, but that is erroneous.

Beller'ophon, the son of Glaucus and Eury'mede, who (according to the legend), having killed Belerus, took refuge with Præ'tus of Argos, and when he repelled the advances made by his wife Antea, was accused by her of having attempted to seduce her. Præ'tus thereupon sent him to Lyeia, with letters that requested the king to slay him. He, however, sent him against the Chimæra, which he slew. He afterwards became king of Lyeia.

Bello'na, the goddess of war, and sister of Mars.

Bel'us, the mythic founder of Babylon, who was worshipped there as a divinity.

Bereni'ce, the wife of Ptolemy Euergetes of Egypt, who cut off her hair in compliance with a vow she had made for her husband's safety in a war with Syria; which was the origin of the constellation so named.—The wife of Herod king of Chalcis, who afterwards lived with her brother Agrippa; and she was present when the Apostle Paul was brought before him.

Bero'sus, a Babylonian priest, who wrote a history of his country; fragments of which have been quoted and preserved by Josephus, and others.

Bery'tus, a famous sea-port of Phœnicia.

Bes'sus, the satrap of Bactria, who murdered his master Darius, after his defeat at Arbela.

Bi'as, one of the seven wise men of Greece, who flourished in the 6th century, B. C.

Bi'on, a poet of Sicily, in the 3rd century, B. C.—A philosopher of Scythia of the 3rd century, B. C. He was a severe satirist in his writings.

Bithyn'ia, a country of Asia Minor, lying on the Euxine, and bounded by Mysia, Phrygia, and Paphlagonia. It was an independent kingdom from the middle of the 5th century, B. C., till the year 74, B. C., when Nicomedes III., dying, bequeathed his kingdom to Rome.

Bi'ton, the son of Cydippe, priestess of Juno, who with his brother Cleobis drew their mother in the sacred car on a festival day; and were rewarded, as she prayed, with the best gift of the goddess; for they died in the following night.

Bitur'iges, a powerful people of Aquitanian Gaul.

Boudic'e'a, the queen of the Iceni, a tribe of Britons; who, in consequence of suffering the cruelest wrongs at the hands of the Romans, revolted, and recovered the whole of the Eastern part of the island from them; but she was defeated in 61, A. D., by Suetonius Paulinus, and killed herself.

Bœo'tia, a country of Greece, lying between the Corinthian Gulf and the Straits of Euripus; and bounded by Attica, Megaris, Phocis, and Locris. The cities in it, of which Thebes was the principal, were independent, but leagued together for their common defence. It once obtained the supremacy of Greece, under the brilliant generalship of Epaminondas; but it lost it when he died, and became as undistinguished as it had been before his time.

Boe'thius, a Roman philosophical writer of the 6th century, A. D.

Bo'i'i, a Celtic people of Germany, whose principal seat was the modern Bavaria.

Bolbiti'ne, a city of Egypt, from which one of the mouths of the Nile derives its name.

Bon'a De'a, a goddess worshipped at Rome, and also called Fauna. Only females were permitted to assist at her festivals.

Bono'nia, a city of that part of Italy called Cisalpine Gaul; now known as Bologna. See Gazetteer.

Bo'reas, the divinity of the north wind, son of Astræus and Aurora; by Orithyia, daughter of Erectheus, he had Zetes and Calais.

Borys'thenes, the ancient name of the Dnieper.

Bos'porus, or Bos'phorus, the ancient name of the Straits of Constantinople, so called because, the legends said, Io, when transformed into a "heifer," "forded" the sea there.—The ancient name of the Straits of Kaffa, whence the city of Panticapæum and the kingdom of which it was the capital, were also called Bosporus. This kingdom lasted from the 5th or 6th century, B. C., to the 4th century, A. D.

Bras'idias, a celebrated Spartan general, who, in the Peloponnesian war, deprived Athens of many of her subject-allies on the northern coast of the Ægean, and especially of Amphipolis; in defending which acquisition he was slain in 422, B. C.

Bren'nus, the chief of the Senones, who, early in the 4th century, B. C., invaded Italy, and took Rome; but was unable to carry the Capitol; his attempt on that being frustrated by the cackling of the geese sacred to Juno, and the heroism of Manlius.—Another Gallic chief, who, in the year 279, B. C., having led an invading force into Greece, was killed near Delphi, the god showing himself able to defend his own territory, as was said.

Bri'areus (according to some legends), the hundred-handed giant, who in the war against Jupiter, hurled rocks against Olympus; but was finally subdued by thunderbolts.

Brigan'tes, the British tribe occupying all the northern part of England; whose chief place was known as Eboracum, or York.

Brise'is, the daughter of Briseus of Lyrnessus, allotted to Achilles, and taken from him by Agamemnon, which was the occasion of the quarrel celebrated in the Iliad.

Britan'nia, the Roman name of Britain, which was inhabited, when it first became known to the civilized world, by a great number of Celtic tribes; who were gradually subdued by the Roman arms. The northern part of Scotland was never subjugated; but south of the Clyde, with the exception of the most rugged parts of Wales and Cornwall, Roman provincial government and civilization gained the complete ascendancy. It became one of the most important provinces of the Empire; and afforded so available a stronghold for pretenders to the purple, that it was said, at last, to bear "crops of tyrants." As the power of Rome declined, the attacks of the Saxons grew more daring and continuous, and in the early part of the 5th century, A. D., the island was finally given up by the Emperor Valentinian, and the Teutonic pirates began their conquests and colonisations, which resulted in the kingdom of England. The history, &c., of it in early times will be given under the names of tribes, cities, and distinguished persons. Stonehenge is the remains of one of the principal temples of religion in Celtic Britain; but Mona was its most sacred seat. The remains of these primeval people are very numerous even now; and their uncivilised state, prior to the Roman conquest, is definitively proved. When the Saxons acquired possession of the Roman province, the Britons were driven into Cornwall, Wales, and Cumberland; and in Wales they retain their native language, and many of their original traditions, though greatly corrupted, to this day.

Britan'nicus, the son of the Emperor Claudius, poisoned by Nero, in 55, A. D.

Britomar'tis, a daughter of Jupiter, who, as the legends tell, drowned herself to escape the importunities of Minos, and was deified by Diana.

Brundu'sium, a town of Italy, at the southern end of the Appian Way, on the high road to Greece.

Brut'tii, the original inhabitants of the southmost part of Italy next Sicily.

Brut'us, Lu'cius Ju'n'ius, the celebrated Roman patriot, who (according to the lays of early Rome), to escape the fate of his brother, whom Tarquinius Superbus had assassinated, affected idiocy; but threw off this disguise at the death of Lucretia, and fired his countrymen with determination to expel the tyrant. He was one of the first consuls; and he ordered his own sons to be put to death for plotting to restore the Tarquins. He died in battle with Aruns, a son of Tarquinius; and was mourned for a whole year by the matrons of Rome.

Brutus, Marcus Junius, another celebrated patriot of Rome, was brought up under the eye of Cato, who was his uncle; and joined Pompey's party, when Julius Cæsar advanced upon Rome. After the victory at Pharsalia, Cæsar not only forgave him, but made him one of his most intimate friends. He joined Cassius, however, in assassinating Cæsar; and after his death went into Greece, where he was defeated by Octavian and Antony at Philippi, and killed himself, in 42, B. C.

Bubastis, a city of Lower Egypt, on the eastern branch of the Nile; where a goddess of the same name was worshipped.

Bucephalus, the name of the horse of Alexander the Great, which never allowed any one else to mount it. In honour of it he built a city on the Hydaspes, near the place where it died.

Burgundiones, or Burgundii, a German tribe settled near the Mayne and the Neckar; who were the founders of the subsequent celebrated kingdom of Burgundy.

Busiris, a king of Egypt, who used, the legends say, to sacrifice foreigners to Jupiter (or Amun), and whom Hercules killed, together with his son.

Byblis, the daughter of Miletus, whom the legends fable to have fallen in love with her brother Caunus, and to have wept herself into a fountain.

Byblus, a city of Phœnicia, where Adonis was worshipped.

Byzantium, a city on the Bosphorus, afterwards more famous as Constantinople [which see].

CABIRI, divinities worshipped in Greece at Thebes, and at Lemnos, Imbros, Samothrace, &c. Their mysteries were celebrated at various places, with great solemnity and splendour.

Cæcus, the son of Vulcan, celebrated in ancient legend as a robber. He stole some of the oxen of Geryon from Hercules, and was killed by him.

Cadmus, the son of Agenor, and brother of Europa, the mythic founder of Thebes. He peopled his city by means of the survivors of a wonderful crop of armed men which sprang up from the teeth of a huge dragon (which he sowed, after he had killed the monster), and fought till nearly all were mutually destroyed. He was married to Harmonia; and at last both of them were changed into serpents. To him the ancients used to attribute the introduction of letters into Greece.

Cæculus, a son of Vulcan, and, according to the legends, a great robber, who lived in Italy, and built Præneste.

Cælius, the name of one of the hills of Rome, which was so called after an Etruscan, named Cælius Vibenna, who settled upon it with his followers.

Cæneus, a legendary Grecian warrior, who was originally a girl, named Cænis, and being loved by Neptune, was endowed by him with invulnerability, and changed into a man. At the fight between the *Centaur*s and the Lapithæ, he was killed by being buried under a mass of rocks and trees, and changed into a bird.

Cære, an Etruscan city, called also Agylla.

Cæsar, Caius Julius, the destroyer of the Republic of Rome, was born in the year 100, B. C., and was connected by marriage with both Marius and Cinna, on which account Sulla the dictator was desirous of putting him to death. He gradually rose in distinction and power, although opposed by Pompey, Cicero, and many others of great name in Rome, until, in 59, B. C., he was consul, with Bibulus, who vainly attempted to thwart him, by abstaining from the exercise of his functions. He now effected a reconciliation between Pompey and Crassus, and entered into a league with them, which is commonly called the first triumvirate. He had served in the East and in Spain before his consulship, and at its conclusion he received the provinces of Gaul and Illyricum, as his government, for 5 years. He never laid down the power then given him. In 8 marvellous campaigns in the Further Gaul, he completely subjugated the country, and even twice visited Britain, which for the first time was looked upon by civilised man. In the year 49, B. C., finding that the intrigues of his enemies called for the utmost promptitude, he marched upon Rome, and Pompey and the aristocratic party escaped to Greece. Having made Italy secure as a base of operations, in the next year Cæsar followed into Greece, and at Pharsalia completely routed the conqueror of the East, and became the master of the Roman world. He next, in a very brief campaign, reduced the kingdom of the Ptolemies to complete subjection; and in 47, B. C., still more rapidly subjugated the kingdom of Pontus. He was now named Dictator; and in the years 46 and 45, B. C., was absent from Rome in Africa and Spain, crushing the remains of the party of Pompey. When he returned, the Dictatorship was conferred on him for life, and he was named consul for the next 10 years. But on the 15th of March, 44, B. C., he was assassinated in the Senate House, by a band of conspirators headed by Brutus and Cassius. He was one of the greatest men that Rome produced; in a happier time he might have contributed to the permanent good and glory of his country; but he fell upon evil days, and he built his own imperishable monument out of its ruins. He was great as a general, as a statesman, as an administrator, as a legislator; Cicero praised his oratory; and his Commentaries remain as the proof of his ability as a historical writer. Science is indebted to him for the first practical correction of the Roman calendar. The name of Cæsar was adopted by the earlier Emperors, and subsequently became an Imperial title, as Augustus also did.

Cæsarea, a city on the sea-coast of Palestine, enlarged and adorned by Herod the Great, and named in honour of Augustus Cæsar. It was the capital of the Roman province.—A city in the north of Palestine, on the Jordan; called Cæ-

MAGNUM VECTIGAL EST PARSIMONIE PRÆMIUM.—COMPETENCY IS THE REWARD OF FRUGALITY.

NEC ASPERNANDUM QUAMVIS EXIGUUM LUCELLUM.—SMALL PROFITS ARE NOT TO BE DESPISED.

sarea Philippi, after its founder, Philip the Tetrarch.

Cæsarion, the son of Julius Cæsar and Cleopatra, put to death by Augustus, after the defeat and death of his mother, when he was 17 years old.

Cai'cus, a river of Mysia, in Asia Minor.

Cala'bria, the south-eastern termination of Italy, also named Iapygia.

Cala'nus, an Indian philosopher or gymnosophist, who accompanied Alexander the Great on his Indian expedition, and burnt himself alive, in the sight of the conqueror and his army.

Cal'chas, a famous Grecian prophet during the Trojan war. He died of grief at being excelled by Mopsus in prophetic knowledge.

Caledo'nia, the ancient name of the most northerly part of the island of Britain, the conquest of which was not attempted by the Romans.

Calig'ula, Cai'us Cæ'sar, Emperor of Rome from 37 to 41, A. D. He was the son of Germanicus and Agrippina, and owed his advancement to the favour of Tiberius, whom he succeeded. The history of the greater part of the few years of his reign is one uninterrupted story of such outrageous follies, and monstrous and brutal cruelty and crime, that the only explanation is that his elevation to absolute and unchecked power had turned his head. Of the latter we can give no instance; but of the former, his raising his horse to the consulship, and his pretended attack on Britain, when he ordered his soldiers to gather the sea-shells on the shores in Gaul, and decreed himself a triumph for his conquest of the ocean, are notorious examples. He was at last murdered, with his wife and daughter.

Cal'lias, a wealthy Athenian, who wasted all his patrimonial wealth in profligacy and the patronage of the sophists. Both Plato and Xenophon have left pictures of him and his household.

Callim'achus, a Grecian poet, who was also a grammarian, and flourished at Alexandria, in the 3rd century, B. C.

Calli'nus, a Grecian poet, who flourished at Ephesus, early in the 7th century, B. C.

Callip'pus, a famous Grecian astronomer of Cyzicus, who flourished in the 4th century, B. C. He invented a cycle of 76 years, which was much used by astronomers after him.

Callis'thenes, a philosopher who went with Alexander the Great into Asia; and was imprisoned for complicity in a plot against his life, and died, or was put to death, in 328, B. C.

Callis'to, a nymph of Diana, turned by her into a bear, after she had been seduced by Jupiter, who placed her amongst the stars; but the legend is related in other ways.

Cal'pe, the mountain at the southern extremity of Spain, now called the Rock of Gibraltar. It was one of the "Pillars of Hercules," Abyla being the other.

Calpur'nia, the wife of Julius Cæsar, who, in consequence of a dream, would have detained him from the Senate House on the day of his assassination.

Caly'don, a town of Ætolia, near which occurred the legendary chase of the great boar, which Meleager slew.

Calyp'so, a nymph who for love of Ulysses detained him for several years upon the island where she resided, on the coast of which he had been shipwrecked.

Camalodu'num, a Roman city and colony in Britain, now called Colchester.

Camari'na, a city of Sicily, which was taken by the Romans, in 258, B. C., and its people all sold into slavery.

Cambyses, king of Persia from 529 to 522, B. C., whose great exploit was the conquest of Egypt, in 525, B. C., after which he seems to have been subject to fits of rage and madness, which were ascribed to the anger of the Egyptian gods, whom he had insulted.

Came'næ, the Latin name for the Muses.

Camil'la, according to Virgil, a Volscian princess, of the most extraordinary swiftness of foot, who helped Turnus against Æneas.

Camill'us, Marcus Fur'ius, one of the most famous warriors of the semi-legendary time of Rome. Five times he was chosen dictator, and he was six times one of the consular tribunes. His victories at Veii, Falisci, &c., are quite of the romantic order, as related in Livy; but the most completely legendary part of his story is, his appointment as dictator against the Gauls, whilst he was suffering the sentence of exile; his acceptance of it, and the victory he gained over Brennus, which caused him to be hailed Rome's second founder. He died in 365, B. C.

Campa'nia, a most delicious tract of Italy south of Rome, famed for its fertility, and for the enervating luxury of the habits of its people. It included Mount Vesuvius, and the volcanic region round it; and Parthenope (now Naples) was its chief place.

Cam'pus Mart'ius, a plain near Rome, afterwards included within the walls of the city, originally devoted to martial assemblies and exercises.

Canda'ce, the name borne by the queens of Æthiopia.

Canda'ules, a king of Lydia, who lost his throne and his life through his besotted admiration of the beauty of the person of his queen. [Gyges.]

Can'næ, a small town in Apulia, where Hannibal utterly routed the Romans, in 216, B. C.

Can'tabri, a tribe of people in Spain, living in the north-east part of the country.

Can'tium, that part of Britain now called Kent.

Cap'aneus, one of the 7 legendary heroes who warred against Thebes, killed by Jupiter.

Capito'l'ium, the name of the temple of Jupiter at Rome, which stood on the summit of the Capitoline Hill. It was the most sacred and stately structure in ancient Rome; and on every occasion of its destruction was rebuilt with increased splendour.

Cappado'cia, a country of eastern Asia Minor, lying between Cilicia, Phrygia, Galatia, and Pontus. It was one of the small independent states which rose out of the decay of the Empire of the Seleu- cide, and it was absorbed into the Roman Empire in the year 17, A. D.

Cap'ua, a city of Campania, which joined Hannibal when he was master of Southern Italy, in 216, B. C.; where his army became demoralized; and which was almost destroyed by the Romans 5 years afterwards.

Caracal'la, Mar'cus Aure'lius Antonin'us, Roman Emperor from 211 to 217, A. D.: succeeded his father Severus at York, in conjunction with his brother Geta, whom he soon murdered. His career was marked throughout with similar crimes, and he was at last murdered himself.

Carac'tacus, the chief of the Silures, who was defeated and carried prisoner to Rome, in 51, A. D., where the Emperor Claudius released him.

Carau'sius, Mar'cus Aure'lius Vale'rius, Emperor of Britain from 287 to 293, A. D. He made himself master of this island by means of the fleet which had been collected against the Saxon Pirates; and was admitted as a partner of the Empire by Diocletian and Maximian. He was murdered by one of his own officers.

Car'bo, Cai'us Papir'ius, was at first a partisan of the Gracchi, but afterwards he joined the patrician party, and justified the murder of his former friend. He was accused of some capital crime in 119, B. C., and poisoned himself.

Ca'ria, a country in the south-western angle of Asia Minor, of which Halicarnassus was the chief place.

Carin'us, Mar'cus Aure'lius, Emperor of Rome from 284 to 285, A. D. He was killed by one of his own soldiers, in a battle, which gave the Empire to Diocletian.

Carma'nia, a country of Persia, now Beloochistan.

Car'na, the divinity who protected the vital parts of the human body.

Carne'ades, a philosopher of Cyrene, who flourished in the 2nd century, B. C.

Cartha'go, the great rival of Rome, a city of Africa, very near the site of the modern Tunis. It was a colony from Phœnicia, and according to Virgil was founded by Dido, and visited by Aeneas on his voyage to Italy. It was essentially a commercial city, and was governed by an oligarchy, at the head of which were two officers called judges (suffetes). The possessions of Carthage in Spain, Sicily, &c., were very extensive; and were menaced by the rising power of Rome. Thence arose the struggle commonly known as the Punic Wars; which lasted, with a few intervals, from 265 to 146, B. C., and resulted in the entire destruction of Carthage. The city was afterwards rebuilt, and became the capital of the Vandal Empire, in the 5th century, A. D.; but it was finally and completely destroyed by the Arabs, near the close of the 7th century, A. D.

Ca'rus, Mar'cus Aure'lius, Emperor of Rome from 282 to 283, A. D. He perished by lightning.

Cas'ca, Pub'lius Servil'ius, one of the assassins of Cæsar, who struck the first blow.

Cas'pii, a tribe of Scythians, from whom the name of the Caspian Sea is derived.

Cassan'der, king of Macedonia and Greece, from 306 to 297, B. C. He was the son of Antipater; and by diplomatic and military skill obtained his kingdom, and secured it during the wars which followed the death of Alexander the Great.

Cassan'dra, the daughter of Priam, king of Troy; who received the gift of prophecy from Apollo; who (according to the legends) attached to it the curse of never being believed, when she would not return his love. She was allotted to Agamemnon at the taking of the city, and was killed by Clytemnestra.

Cassiodo'rus, Mag'nus Aure'lius, a statesman and writer, who flourished in the 5th century, A. D.

Cassiope'a, the queen of Cepheus of Æthiopia, and mother of Andromeda.

Cassiter'ides, the name of the Scilly Islands.

Cas'sius, Cai'us Longi'nus, the chief of the conspiracy against Julius Cæsar. He was a partisan of Pompey, whom Cæsar had taken into his favour; after the assassination in 44, B. C., he went into the East, and in the year 42, B. C., was defeated at Philippi, and killed himself.

Cas'sius Avid'us, caused himself to be proclaimed Emperor, when he was commanding in the East, in 175, A. D., and was soon afterwards assassinated.

Cassivelaun'us, the British chief who opposed the first attack of Julius Cæsar on Britain.

Casta'lea, the sacred fountain at the foot of Mount Parnassus.

Castor and Pollux, the twin sons of Leda, by Jupiter, thence called Dioscuri; and brothers of Helena. Castor was a tamer of horses, Pollux was a celebrated boxer. The legends of their adventures are numerous; and finally they were placed amongst the stars as the constellation Gemini.

Cata'na, a city of Sicily, near Mount Ætna.

Catili'na, Lu'cius Ser'gius, the conspirator, whose attempt to overturn the constitution and state of Rome in the year 63, B. C., was defeated by the vigilance and spirit of Cicero. He was defeated and killed by the consul Antonius in the following year.

Ca'to, Mar'cus Por'cius, called Ma'jor, and Cen'sor, a very distinguished Roman, whose name has become a synonym of severe simplicity of life and manners. His discharge of the office of censor was so strict that he retained the name ever afterwards. He was the most determined antagonist of Carthage; and was the author of a work on rustic matters, still in existence. He died in 149, B. C.—A great-grandson of the Censor, surnamed Uticensis. He followed the example of his great forefather, and was distinguished for his high-toned philosophy and morality, as well as for his resistance to the luxury of his contemporaries. He took the side of Pompey when the civil war broke out; and in the year 46, B. C., having defended the city of Utica against the conqueror as long as possible, killed himself rather than see the final ruin of the republic.

Ca'ti, or Cha'tti, a tribe of Germans living on the Rhine.

Catullus, Valerius, a Roman poet who flourished in the 1st century, B. C.

Caucasus, a mountain-range between the Euxine and the Caspian Seas, still bearing that name. See Gazetteer.

Caudine Forks, a narrow valley near Caudium, where the Samnites made prisoners a whole Roman army, and sent it under the yoke, in 321, B. C.

Cayster, a famous river of Lydia, in Asia Minor.

Cebes, a Greek philosopher who wrote an allegory upon human life, and flourished in the 4th century, B. C.

Cecrops, the mythic founder of Athens; who some writers said came from Egypt.

Celsus, Aulus Cornelius, a Roman physician of the 1st century, A. D.; whose work is still read in medical schools.

Celtæ, the name of one great branch of the European race, which was originally settled in Spain, Gaul, and Britain.

Celtiberi, a Celtic tribe of Spain, subdued by the Romans in the 2nd century, B. C.

Centauri, a monstrous race, represented as half-horse and half-man, said to have been the progeny of Ixion and his cloud-goddess, and to have lived in Thessaly. They principally figure in old legends among the guests at the wedding of Pirithous, which they changed into a deadly, and for themselves a disastrous, battle. It is often represented in ancient sculptures.

Cephalus, the husband of Procris, who was beloved (as the legends said) by Aurora. He unintentionally killed his wife, with an unerring javelin the goddess had given him.

Cepheus, the husband of Cassiopea, and father of Andromeda.

Ceræsus, a city of Asia Minor, on the coast of the Euxine, from which the cherry was brought into Europe.

Cerberus, the three-headed dog which guarded the entrance to the infernal regions.

Ceres, the daughter of Saturn and Cybele, and the goddess of agriculture. The principal seat of her worship was at Eleusis in Attica. Her children were Proserpine, Plutus, and a horse named Arion.

Cethegus, Caius Cornelius, one of the conspirators with Catiline, who was put to death in prison, by order of the senate, at the instigation of Cicero, in 63, B. C.

Ceyx, the husband of Alcyone.

Chabrias, a famous Athenian general, who first devised the mode of receiving the charge of an enemy with extended spears and shields firmly planted, in 378, B. C.

Chæroneæ, a town in Bœotia, where Philip of Macedonia and Alexander defeated the Greeks in 338, B. C.

Chalcædon, a city opposite Byzantium, founded by the Megareans, in the 7th century, B. C.

Chalcis, the chief town of the island of Eubœa.

Chaldæa, a province of Babylonia, sometimes used to signify the entire country.

Chao'nia, a part of Epirus, nearest Italy.

Chaos, the supposed formless void which preceded the Cosmos, or order of created things.

Chares, the great Grecian statuary who made the Colossus of Rhodes. He flourished in the 3rd century, B. C.

Chærites, the Greek name of the Graces.

Chæron, the ferryman of souls over the Styx in the infernal regions.

Charybdis, the mythic daughter of Nep-tune and Earth; really a whirlpool in the Straits of Messina.

Chau'ci, a German tribe living on the Elbe.

Cheops and Cheph'ren, Egyptian kings, said to have been the builders of the Great and the second Pyramids.

Chersonesus, the ancient name of the strip of land forming the northern coast of the modern Dardanelles.—The ancient name of the Crimea. See Gazetteer.

Cherus'ci, a German tribe living on the Weser.

Chilo, one of the seven wise men of Greece, who flourished in the 6th century, B. C.

Chimæra, a fabulous monster of Lycia, which had a lion's head, a goat's body, and a serpent's tail; destroyed by Bellerophon.

Chione, the daughter of Dædalion, who, according to the legends, was killed by Diana for boasting of her beauty.

Chios, the ancient name of Scio.

Chiron, a centaur, son of Saturn and Philyra, famous in Grecian legend as the teacher of all the heroes whatever arts beside the warrior's they knew. He was placed amongst the stars, as the constellation Sagittarius.

Chloris, a daughter of Niobe, not killed by Apollo and Diana, when the rest of the family was destroyed.—The wife of Zephyrus, and the Grecian goddess of flowers.

Chryseis, the daughter of Chryses, priest of Apollo, allotted to Agamemnon, but restored to her father, when Apollo devastated the camp with his silver arrows.

Chrysippus, a Stoic philosopher, who flourished at Athens in the 3rd century, B. C.

Cicero, Marcus Tullius, a distinguished statesman and the greatest orator of Rome, born in 106, B. C. He received the best education which his father could procure for him at Rome, and when quite a youth, served in the Marsian war. When Sulla was in power, he visited and studied at Athens and Rhodes, returning to Rome in 77, B. C. He was Quæstor in Sicily in 75, B. C., and had already by his eloquence acquired a high position in the State. And in 63, B. C., when he was Consul with Antonius, he detected and suppressed the conspiracy of Catiline, for which he received almost extravagant gratitude. His enemies, and in particular Clodius, now exerted their utmost power for his overthrow, and in 58, B. C., finding it impossible to resist or escape their malice, he went as an exile into Greece; whence he was recalled in the following year. Six years afterwards he was sent as Proconsul into Cilicia, where he administered affairs in a satisfactory manner, and returned to Rome in the commencement of 49, B. C. He now joined the party of Pompey; but after his defeat at Pharsalia, he was pardoned, and once more returned to Rome, where he was principally engaged in the composition of his philosophical and other treatises, till the assassination of Cæsar, in 44, B. C., when he once more appeared in the rostrum, and in his most splendid orations, which he called Philippics, exposed and denounced the ambition and treason of Mark Antony, and defied his power. For this, when the Second Triumvirate was formed, he was put to death, and his head was carried to Rome and exposed in the forum on the spot from which he had so often spoken, in the year 43, B. C. His philosophical writings are of the highest value and interest, as are his works on Rhetoric. His numerous letters are a treasure of contemporary history; and his Orations are unsurpassed in eloquence and force. In all of them his native language appears in its most perfect form and purity, and may be studied to the greatest advantage. His personal character is not so admirable; his inordinate vanity and vacillating disposition, together with his ambition, and other faults which he shared with so many men of his time, afforded too much ground for the accusations of his enemies, and prevented him from serving his country to the full extent of his ability and influence.

Cilicia, a country of Asia Minor, lying between the Mediterranean and Mount Taurus; and bounded by Pamphylia, Pisidia, Cappadocia, and Syria. It fell under the successive conquerors of Asia Minor; and was a great haunt of pirates in the 1st century, B. C.

Cimbri, a German people, inhabiting the present country of Denmark, which was called Cimbrica Chersonesus. They invaded Gaul in the 2nd century, B. C., and along with the Teutons and other tribes, were entirely defeated by Marius at Aquæ Sextiæ in 102, B. C.

Cimmerii, a legendary people mentioned by Homer.—A tribe of Scythians living near the Palus Mæotis.

Cimon, the son of Miltiades, who distinguished himself in the wars against the Persians; and who was once ostracised, on account of his friendship for Sparta. He died in 449, B. C., whilst he was besieging Citium.

Cincinnatus, Lucius Quinctius, a famous Roman general, who being made dictator, in 458, B. C., to carry on the war against the Æqui and Volsci, was found engaged in ploughing his own farm. He soon laid down the office, and returned to his simple and hardy life. In the year 439, B. C., he was again appointed dictator, on occasion of intestine troubles in Rome.

Cineas, the adroit ambassador of Pyræhus of Epirus, whose diplomacy and eloquence were most highly celebrated, but which failed to persuade the Roman Senate to accept the terms of the peace which he brought.

Cinna, Lucius Cornelius, a celebrated Roman party leader, shortly before the overthrow of the republic. He was consul from 87 to 84, B. C., and being joined by Marius, he massacred the partisans of Sulla, who was absent in the East. When he heard of Sulla's return, he prepared to resist him, but was killed by his own soldiers.

Cinyras, a king of Cyprus, and priest of Venus; the father of Adonis (according to the legends) by his own daughter, Myrrha.

Circe, the daughter of Apollo and Perse, who, according to the Odyssey, lived in the island Ææa; where Ulysses was shipwrecked, whose companions she turned into swine. She had a son named Telegonus by Ulysses.

Cithæron, a mountain of Bœotia, sacred to the Muses, and to Bacchus. [Pentheus, Actæon.]

Claudia'nus, Clau'dius, a Roman poet, who flourished at the end of the 4th century, A. D.

Clau'dius, Appius, Cæcus, the constructor of the Appian Way and the Appian Aqueduct, whilst he was censor, in 312–308, B. C. He was celebrated as an orator, and as a writer, although he was blind.

Clau'dius, Tiberius, Dru'sus Ne'ro Germanicus, the Emperor of Rome from 41 to 54, A. D. He was nephew to the Emperor Tiberius; and was placed on the throne by the soldiers after they had murdered Caligula. He was a very weak prince, and had the unhappiness of being married to two of the most flagitiously bad women in Rome, in succession. During his reign Britain was in part subdued, and reduced to the form of a province.

Clau'dius, Mar'cus Aurelius, Roman Emperor from 268 to 270, A. D. He defeated the Goths and Alemanni, and was called Gothicus.

Cleanthes, a philosopher of the Stoic school, who flourished near the beginning of the 3rd century, B. C.

Clearchus, a Spartan general who assisted Cyrus in his attempt against his brother Artaxerxes, and was taken prisoner and put to death after the battle of Cunaxa.

Cleobulus, one of the 7 Wise Men of Greece, who flourished in Rhodes during the 6th century, B. C.

Cleombrotus, the king of Sparta who was defeated and killed at the battle of Leuctra, in 371, B. C.

Cleomenes, the king of Sparta who assisted in the expulsion of Hippias from Athens, and interfered in its domestic affairs in other respects, about the years 510, 508, and 504, B. C.—Another Spartan king, who attempted to revive the constitution of Lycurgus. He was defeated by the Achaean League at Sellasia, in 222, B. C., and killed himself soon afterwards.

Cleon, a famous political leader of Athens, who was so unmercifully satirized by Aristophanes. He maintained the patriotic view of the Peloponnesian war; and finally was defeated and killed at Amphipolis, in 422, B. C.

Cleopat'ra, the famous queen of Egypt, whose beauty fascinated Julius Cæsar, and cost Mark Antony the government of the world. After the defeat at Actium, FALLACIA ALIA ALIAM TRUDIT.—ONE LIE BEGETS ANOTHER.

PALMAM QUI MERUIT FERAT.—LET HIM BEAR THE PALM WHO HATH DESERVED IT.

she killed herself by the bite of an asp, in the year 30, B. C.

Clío, the name of the Muse of History.

Clísthēnes, an Athenian lawgiver, who established a popular constitution after the expulsion of Hippias, in 509, B. C.

Clo'dius, Publius, Pul'cher, a Roman noble of the Claudian family, famous for his profligacy, and for his inveterate opposition to Cicero. He was murdered in a casual fray with Annius Milo, in 52, B. C.

Clæ'lia, a girl of Rome, who (the legends said) having been given up to Porsena as a hostage, escaped to Rome by swimming the Tiber.

Clo'tho, the name of one of the Fates.

Clu'sium, a city of Etruria, and the capital of the kingdom of Porsena. It was taken by the Gauls in 391, B. C.

Cly'mene, the daughter of Oceanus, and mother of Atlas and Prometheus, according to some legends.—The mother of Phaëthon, by Apollo, as the legends say.

Clytemne'stra, the daughter of Tyndareus and Leda, and wife of Agamemnon, who murdered him on his return from Troy, and was killed by her son Orestes.

Cly'tie, the daughter of Oceanus, turned into a sunflower, as the legends say, through her love for Apollo.

Cni'dus, a famous city of Asia Minor, where was the temple of Venus, in which the statue of the goddess by Praxiteles stood.

Coc'les, Hora'tius, a legendary hero of Rome, who kept the whole army of Porsena at bay, at the bridge leading to Rome, until it was broken down behind him; when he plunged with his arms into the stream, and swam to the other side in safety.

Cocy'tus, one of the rivers of the infernal regions, according to the poets, but really a river of Epirus.

Co'drus, the last king of Athens, who, according to the legends, devoted himself to death for his country, when at war with the Dorians, the oracle having declared that those whose king was killed should conquer.

Cæle-Syr'ia, the region between the mountain ranges called Libanus, or Lebanon, and Antilibanus, and which usually belonged to Syria.

Col'chis, a country at the south-eastern angle of the Euxine, where, according to the old legends, the golden fleece was, and to which the Argonauts sailed. It was part of the Roman Empire in the 2nd and 3rd centuries, A. D.

Collati'nus, Lu'cius Tarquin'i'us, the husband of Lucretia, and one of the first consuls of Rome. Afterwards, being a Tarquin, the legends say that he resigned, and went to live at Lavinium.

Col'ophon, a city of Ionia, in Asia Minor; said to have been the birth-place of Homer by some.

Colos'sæ, a city of Phrygia in Asia Minor, known to us chiefly through the Epistle of the Apostle Paul addressed to the Christians there.

Com'modus, Lu'cius Aure'lius, Emperor of Rome from 180 to 192, A. D. He was one of the worst of the brutal monsters who wore the purple, and was assassinated at last, by one whom he purposed to put to death.

Concor'dia, a goddess to whom many temples were built at Rome; she typified the good results of the compact between the patricians and the plebeian classes.

Co'non, a famous Athenian commander, who escaped from the disaster at Ægospotamus, and afterwards defeated the Spartan general Pisander.—A celebrated astronomer of Samos, who flourished in the 3rd century, B. C.

Con'stans, Emperor of the West, from 337 to 350, A. D. He was an unworthy son of the great Constantine, and fell by the hand of a usurper.

Constantinop'olis, the name of the splendid metropolis of the Roman Empire, built about 330, A. D., by Constantine the Great, on the site of the ancient Byzantium. It was defended on two sides by the harbour and the Propontis; and strong fortifications protected the landward side. It was divided into 14 regions, of which the old city formed but one. Splendid buildings of a semi-oriental style of architecture adorned it; the church of Sancta Sophia being one of the most conspicuous. Other churches and halls, palaces, hippodromes, baths, columns, &c., rendered it in time more grand than Rome itself. Like Byzantium, it often experienced the evils of war; but with the exception of the short-lived Latin Empire, it remained the capital of the East, until the year 1453, A. D., when it was taken by the Turks, and the last page of Ancient History was turned. For the account of the modern city, see the Gazetteer.

Constanti'nus, Fla'vius Vale'rius Aure'lius, the Great, Emperor of Rome from 306 to 337, A. D., was the son of Constantius Chlorus, and seized on a part of the empire at his father's death. By the defeat of Maxentius near Rome, in 312, A. D., and that of Licinius, near Chalcedon, in 323, A. D., he acquired the whole of it; which he reduced under one regular system of administration, laying the foundation for that remarkable organization which enabled the Byzantine Empire to stand through so many shocks and vicissitudes of fortune. He was the first of the rulers of the world who avowed himself a convert to Christianity, and the legends of the church ascribe his conversion to the vision of a cross in the sky, inscribed, Under this banner conquer, when he was about to engage Maxentius. He transferred the seat of the empire to Byzantium, which he rebuilt, and named Constantinopolis.

Constanti'nus, Fla'vius Clau'dius, Emperor of the western Empire from 337 to 340, A. D. Attempting to wrest Italy from his brother Constans, he was defeated and killed at Aquileia.

Constan'tius, Fla'vius Vale'rius, Chlo'rus, Emperor of Rome from 305 to 306, A. D. He had held a subordinate post in the Empire under Diocletian and Maximian from the year 292, A. D., and he finally died at York, whilst on an expedition against the Caledonians.

QUI CUM FORTUNA CONVENIT, DIVES EST.—HE IS RICH WHO IS CONTENT WITH HIS CONDITION.

IN ANGUSTIS AMICI BONI APPARENT.—TRUE FRIENDS SHOW THEMSELVES IN ADVERSITY.

Constan'tius, Fla'vius Ju'lius, Roman Emperor from 337 to 361. He held the Eastern part of the Empire at first; but gradually acquired the rest of the Empire by the defeat of Magnentius, and brought it all under one government again.

Corcy'ra, a large island of the Ionian Sea, now called Corfu. See Gazetteer.

Corin'thus, one of the most celebrated cities of ancient Greece, which stood on the isthmus joining the Peloponnesus with the mainland. Being a great place of trade, and having numerous colonies, it became exceedingly wealthy; and it was celebrated for its luxury and the cultivation of the arts, but never became a peer of Athens or Sparta in the history of Hellas. It fell beneath the power of Rome in 146, B. C., and never recovered its former splendour.

Coriola'nus, Cai'us Mar'cius, a legendary Roman hero, whose story exhibits him as signally successful in the wars against the Volscians; but afterwards as banished because of his arrogant contempt of the plebeians. He was said then to have taken refuge with his old enemies, and to have led them against Rome; which he would have taken, had he not been diverted, with great difficulty, by an embassy of his wife and mother. The tale ascribes his death to the treachery of the Volseian leader, Aufidius.

Corne'lia, the mother of the Gracchi, the daughter of Scipio Africanus, and one of the most renowned of the Roman Matrons of the most splendid times of the Republic.

Corne'lius Ne'pos, a Roman biographical writer, who flourished just before the Christian æra.

Coræ'bus, a native of Elis, who was the conqueror at the Olympic games in 776, B. C., from which period the Olympiads are reckoned.

Coro'nis, the daughter of king Phoroneus, whom Neptune loved, and who was changed (so the legends say) into a crow by Minerva.

Corvus, Mar'cus Vale'rius, a Roman hero, who, according to the tales, was assisted in killing a gigantic Gaul in single combat by a raven, which picked out the eyes of his antagonist.

Coryban'tes, Phrygian priests of Cybele, who are said to have nursed Jupiter in Crete.

Cos, one of the islands of the Ægean, where an excessively fine kind of gauzy silk stuff was made.

Cos'sus, Ser'vius Corne'lius, a Roman hero, who having slain the king of Veii in single combat, in 428, B. C., dedicated his armour in the temple of Jupiter on the Capitol.

Col'tus, the hundred-headed giant of the fables, son of Cœlus and Terra.

Cras'sus, Mar'cus Licin'ius, the Rich; one of the most eminent men at Rome in the last days of the Republic. He was joined with Cæsar and Pompey in the first triumvirate; and went to Syria, but being defeated by the Parthians, he fell into their hands, and his head was cut off, and molten gold was poured into its mouth, because of his excessive cupidity. This happened in 55, B. C.

Cre'on, the king of Thebes, who, in the legend of the war against that city, forbade any one to bury the bodies of Eteocles and Polynices; and condemned their sister Antigone to death for disobeying this order.

Cre'ta, the most extensive island of the Grecian world, now called Candia. It was settled by the Dorians, and was famous only as the place where the legendary legislator Minos lived. The Romans subdued it in about 67, B. C.

Creu'sa, the wife of Æneas, daughter of Priam, king of Troy, said by Virgil and others to have perished as with her husband she attempted to escape from the city.

Cris'sa, a city of Phocis, sacred to Apollo of Delphi. The Amphictyonic council made war upon it, and destroyed it, in the 6th century, B. C.

Cræ'sus, the famous king of Lydia, who reigned in the middle of the 6th century, B. C. He was visited by Solon, whose wisdom he admired. Misled by the oracle at Delphi, he made war on Cyrus, king of Persia, and was overthrown, in 546, B. C., but his life was spared by the conqueror.

Croto'na, a Greek city of Italy, founded in the 8th century, B. C., and very powerful 200 years later. It was famous as the place where Pythagoras lived, and where Milo the wrestler was born.

Ctes'ias, a Greek historian of Persia, who was physician to Artaxerxes Mnemon, about 400, B. C.

Ctesib'ius, a mechanical philosopher of Alexandria, who flourished in the 3rd century, B. C.

Cu'mæ, a city of Campania in Italy, near which resided one of the Sibyls.

Cupi'do, the Roman name of the god of Love, the son of Venus.

Cure'tes. [Corybantes.]

Curia'tii, 3 brothers of a family of Alba, who contested as champions with the 3 Horatii, brothers of a Roman family, the supremacy of their respective cities. The defeat of the Curiatii gave the power to Rome.

Cur'sor, Lu'cius Papir'ius, a famous Roman general of the times of the Samnite wars, near the end of the 4th century, B. C., who was on two occasions made dictator, besides being consul five times.

Cur'tius, Met'tius, the hero of one of the old legends of Rome, who threw himself, fully armed, into a chasm which had opened in the forum, and which the augurs declared could be closed only by casting into it the greatest treasure of the city.

Cyara'res, a king of Media, at the commencement of the 6th century, B. C.

Cyb'ele, one of the names of the goddess Rhea.

Cyclades, a cluster of islands in the Ægean Sea.

Cyclo'pes, the one-eyed gigantic shepherds, or Titans, and workers in metal, who, according to different legends, lived in Sicily, or wrought in the forges beneath Mount Ætna, under the superintendence of Vulcan.

Cyc'nus, the invulnerable son of Nep- tune, killed by Achilles, but (according to the poets) changed into a swan.

Cyd'nus, a river of Cilicia, famous for the piercing chill of its waters.

Cylon, an Athenian, who, with the intent to make himself tyrant of Athens, occupied the Acropolis; and being reduced by a blockade, was put to death by Megacles, in violation of his oath to spare him.

Cynægi'rus, the famous Athenian hero, who at the battle of Marathon lost his hands in attempting to prevent a Persian ship from being pushed off, and then seized the gunwale with his teeth.

Cyprus, a large island of the eastern extremity of the Mediterranean, generally subject to the strongest maritime power. Venus was especially worshipped there.

Cyre'ne, a Greek city in Africa, west of Egypt; a place of great trade and importance; which was afterwards subjected by the Ptolemies, and from them passed into the possession of Rome. Its territory was called Cyrenaica.

Cyrus, the name of the founder of the Empire of Persia. It is not easy to disentangle his real history from the numerous legends which from a very early period were grafted upon it. The commonly received account is, that he was the son of a Persian noble, and grandson of Astyages of Media, who was induced by an oracle to order him to be killed when yet an infant, which order was not obeyed; and that growing up and learning the secret of his parentage, he aspired to the throne, and obtained it by the ruin of the Empire of the Medes. He gradually subdued all Western Asia, and was at length, in the year 529, B. C., defeated and killed by the Scythian queen Tomyris. It was Cyrus who terminated the 70 years' long captivity of the Jews, by giving them permission to return to their own land and rebuild Jerusalem.

Cyrus, a son of the Persian king Darius Nothus, who, when satrap of western Asia Minor, organized an expedition against his brother Artaxerxes Mnemon, who was then king, and fell by his brother's hand at the battle of Cunaxa. The celebrated 10,000 Greeks, and Xenophon, the Greek historian, were engaged on his side in this desperate attempt; and after its failure, effected their wonderful "Retreat" to the Euxine.

Cythere'a, an island of the Mediterranean, to the south of Laconia, famous for the worship of Venus.

Cyzicus, a Greek city on an island in the Propontis, afterwards united to the mainland by an embankment.

DA'CIA, the name of the country lying between the river Ister (or the Danube) and the mountains now called the Carpathians. It became known to the Roman world only after the establishment of the Empire, and it was for a short time part of the Empire, but was relinquished to the Goths near the end of the 3rd century, A. D.

Dædalus, the legendary constructor of the labyrinth of Crete, who, when imprisoned by Minos, was fabled to have made himself waxen wings, and escaped. His son Icarus, imprisoned with him, flew so high, says the story, that the sun melted the wax, and he fell into the sea, called after him Icarian, and was drowned.

Dalmat'ia, the country bordering on the north-east coast of the Adriatic Sea, subdued by the Romans about the Christian æra.

Damas'cus, a celebrated city of Syria, which still exists, and enjoys its ancient fame.

Dam'ocles, a flatterer of Dionysius of Syracuse, who is said to have instructed him concerning the real happiness of a tyrant, by inviting him to a sumptuous banquet, and causing a naked sword to be suspended over his head by a single hair; on discovering which he found it impossible to enjoy the feast.

Da'mon, the hero of one of the old legendary tales of friendship, who offered himself to die in the place of his friend.

Dan'ae, the daughter of Acrisius of Argos, and mother of Perseus, by Jupiter, who obtained access to her by changing himself into a shower of gold.

Dana'ides, the fifty daughters of Danaus, of whom all but one murdered their husbands on the wedding night, and were condemned to fetch water in sieves in the infernal regions, according to the legend.

Daph'ne, the daughter of Peneus, beloved by Apollo, and changed into a laurel (according to the poets), as the only means of escape from him.

Dar'danus, the eponymous hero and founder of the Trojan kingdom; called also the son of Jupiter and Electra.

Dari'us, the son of Hystaspes, king of Persia from 521 to 485, B. C. He won the kingdom by the neighing of his horse; having been one of the great nobles who killed the false Smerdis. His great exploits were, the fruitless invasion of Scythia; and the unsuccessful attempt on Greece, which was defeated by the great victory of the Athenians at Marathon.

Dari'us No'thus, king of Persia from 424 to 405, B. C.

Dari'us Codoman'nus, the last king of Persia, from 336 to 331, B. C. He was routed by Alexander the Great at Issus, and again at Arbela, and finally murdered by Bessus.

De'cius, Cai'us Mes'sius Traja'nus, Emperor of Rome from 249 to 251, A. D. In his reign happened one of the great persecutions of the Christians.

De'cius Mus, Pub'lius, the name of a father and a son, who in the earlier history of Rome were renowned for having solemnly devoted themselves to death in battle, for the purpose of insuring the victory of their country. The father devoted himself in 340, B. C., the son in 295, B. C.

Deian'ra, the sister of Meleager and wife of Hercules, who won her from Achelous. [Nessus.]

Deidami'a, the daughter of Lycomedes, king of Scyros, and mother of Neoptolemus by Achilles.

Deio'ces, the first king of Media, about the end of the 8th century, B. C.

PAUPER MUTAT DOMINUM NON SORTEM.—A POOR MAN CHANGES HIS MASTER BUT NOT HIS CONDITION.

QUI EDUCAT VIRTUTEM EST MAGIS QUAM PATER.—HE WHO TEACHES VIRTUE IS GREATER THAN A FATHER.

Dēlos, one of the Cyclades, and sacred to Apollo, who, with his sister Diana, was born there.

Del'phi, a town of Phocis, where was the most famous temple and oracle of Apollo.

Demaratus, a king of Sparta, who was dethroned in 491, B. C., and went to Persia, where he instigated Xerxes to invade Greece, and afterwards accompanied his expedition.

Deméter, the Greek name of Ceres.

Demetrius Poliorcetes, king of Macedonia from 294 to 287, B. C., the son of Antigonus, and one of the greatest generals of his times. He distinguished himself particularly at the siege of Rhodes in 305, B. C. He fell at last into the hands of Seleucus, and died soon afterwards.

Demetrius Phalareus, one of the most distinguished Athenians during the early period of its decline. He was made governor of Athens by Cassander in 317, B. C., and so won the good opinions of his fellow-citizens that there were 360 statues erected in his honour. He fled to Egypt when his namesake, the son of Antigonus, came to Athens, and died there about 283, B. C.

Democritus, the celebrated philosopher of Abdera, who is said to have dwelt most on the ridiculous aspect of common things. He was a man of immense learning and research, and flourished in the 5th century, B. C.

Demosthenes, the great orator of Athens and of antiquity, born about 385, B. C. Being subject to many physical defects, by assiduous effort and study he overcame them all, and very soon became one of the first statesmen of his day. He detected and denounced the designs of Philip of Macedonia before they were patent to the world, and devoted himself with all the energy of the best times of Greece to oppose and defeat them. But the "silver spear" of Philip was more powerful than the "golden mouth" of Demosthenes; and at Chæronea he saw his country at the mercy of the man of Macedon. One cloud of suspicion rests on his memory, he was condemned for taking bribes of Harpalus. At the death of Alexander, he hoped, but in vain, to see Greece once more free; the cause of liberty was doomed, and the great patriot died, self-poisoned, in sanctuary at Calauria, in 322, B. C. Many of his orations remain to this day: that "on the Crown," spoken in fact against Æschines, is the most splendid production which the world has ever seen.

Dentatus, Marcus Curius, one of the heroes of the early and simple age of the Roman republic. His great exploit was the defeat of Pyrrhus in 275, B. C.

Dentatus, Lucius Siccinius, a brave Roman, treacherously murdered by the contrivance of Appius Claudius. He had been in 120 battles, and had received so many honourable wounds and rewards as to be almost incredible. When assailed by his assassins, he slew 15 outright and wounded 30 more before he fell.

Der'ceto, the Greek name of a Syrian goddess, supposed to be the Dagon of the Philistines.

Deuca'lion, the son of Prometheus, who, according to the legends, was, with his wife Pyrrha, the sole survivor of the Thessalian deluge. To repopulate the land, by command of the oracle, the two as they went from the temple threw behind them the stones which they picked up, and they were changed into men and women.

Diag'oras, a Rhodian who, himself an Olympic victor, had two sons Olympic victors on the same day.—A philosopher of Melos, called the Atheist, for his opposition to the popular superstitions, who flourished in the 5th century, B. C.

Dian'a, the sister of Apollo, and daughter of Latona and Jupiter, the goddess of the chase, identified also with the moon. She was regarded as a virgin goddess, but as Phœbe she loved and visited Endymion. The Diana of Ephesus was a personification of the fruitfulness of nature; and was rather Asiatic than Grecian.

Dicæarchus, a philosopher of Sicily, who flourished in the 4th century, B. C.

Did'ius Sal'vius Julia'nus, Emperor of Rome for 2 months in the year 193, A. D., by purchase of the title from the Prætorians; who, tiring of him so soon, murdered him.

Dido, the legendary foundress of Carthage. She was daughter of Belus, and sister of Pygmalion of Tyre, who murdered her husband, on which she fled, and purchased as the site of a new Tyre as much land as she could surround by a bull's hide. Virgil represents her as dying by her own hand out of love for Æneas, who visited her rising city in his wanderings.

Diocletianus, Valerius, Emperor of Rome from 284 to 305, A. D. He owed his elevation to the soldiery, and having rid himself of rivals and opponents, he raised Maximianus to a share of the empire. In 292, A. D., Constantius Chlorus and Galerius were also associated in the government, in a subordinate rank. After a prosperous reign Diocletian abdicated the throne, and spent the remainder of his life in privacy, dying in 313, A. D. In his reign happened one of the most cruel of all the persecutions to which the early Christians were subjected.

Diodorus Sic'ulus, a Greek historian of Sicily, who flourished in the 1st century, B. C.

Diog'enes, the famous philosopher, whose cynical moroseness and brutal mode of life have furnished so many subjects for ancient anecdotes. He flourished in the 4th century, B. C., and, happily for the world, had few imitators in his extravagant disregard of the decencies of life.

Diomé'des, one of the greatest heroes among the Greeks in the Trojan war. He was the son of Tydeus and Deipyle, and his first exploits were performed in the war against Thebes. In the later war he was the especial favourite of Minerva, who encouraged him to attack and wound both Mars and Venus, who were engaged on the side of the Trojans. Other legends represent him as sharing the common fate of the Grecian chiefs, and compelled to seek another home, which he is said to have found in Italy.

MORS EST CERTA; TEMPUS INCERTUM.—DEATH IS CERTAIN; TIME UNCERTAIN.

TEMPERANTIA EST OPTIMA MEDICINA.—TEMPERANCE IS THE BEST MEDICINE.

Di'on, a Syracusan, a pupil of Plato, who having expelled the younger Dionysius from the tyranny, was himself made tyrant, and fell a victim to a conspiracy in 353, B. C.

Di'on Cas'sius, a Roman historian, who flourished about the end of the 2nd century, A. D.

Di'one, according to some legends, the mother of Venus, by Jupiter.

Dionys'ius the Elder, tyrant of Syracuse, who entering the army, rose rapidly to the chief command, by which he was enabled to make himself master of his native city. During his reign, which lasted nearly 40 years, he succeeded in humbling the power of Carthage, and in extending his sway not only over all Sicily, but also over some part of Italy. He was a patron and cultivator of literature and the arts, but became at last a tyrant in the more modern sense of the word. He died in 367, B. C.

Dionys'ius the Younger, son of the former, succeeded his father in the tyranny of Syracuse; but he lacked his father's power, and was expelled by Dion after he had reigned 12 years. Ten years later, however, he regained his throne, and held it till he was a second time expelled by Timoleon, in 343, B. C. The rest of his life he spent as a private citizen at Corinth.

Dionys'ius of Halicarnassus, a Greek historian, who flourished in the 1st century, B. C.

Dionys'sus, the Greek name of Bacchus.

Dios'curi, the title of Castor and Pollux.

Di'ce, the wife of Lycus, whom Amphion and Zethus tied to the horns of a wild bull, by which she was killed.

Dis, a name of Pluto.

Dodo'na, a place in Epirus, where was an ancient Grecian oracle, the answers of which were given by a dove, according to some, but by the rustling of the oak grove there, as others say.

Dolabel'la, Pub'lius Corne'lius, a Roman noble, who married the daughter of Cicero. He was a partisan of Cæsar, and after his death he was guilty of such extortion in Greece and Asia Minor, that the Senate made war against him, and he killed himself to avoid their sentence in 43, B. C.

Domitia'nus, Ti'tus Fla'vius, Augustus, Emperor of Rome from 81 to 96, A. D. Although the brother of Titus, he was one of the worst emperors that Rome saw: both Juvenal and Tacitus have given a picture of what his reign was, and of the enormities he committed. He was in the end murdered by the contrivance of his wife.

Do'res, one of the great Hellenic races, which included the Spartans, Argives, Messenians, Corinthians, Megareans, Achæans, &c. They colonized Crete, Caria, Rhodes, &c.

Do'ris, the daughter of Oceanus, and mother of the 50 Nereids, by her brother Nereus.

Do'rus, the eponymous ancestor of the Dorians.

Dra'co, the first legislator at Athens, whose laws were so severe that they were said to be written in blood. He flourished in the 7th century, B. C.

Drusil'la, the sister of the Emperor Caligula, with whom he lived incestuously. —The daughter of Herod Agrippa, and wife of Felix, the procurator of Judæa.

Dru'sus, Né'ro Clau'dius, the son of Clau'dius Nero and Livia, and married to the daughter of Mark Antony. His great exploits were performed in a series of campaigns in Germany, from 12 to 9, B. C.

Dru'sus Cæ'sar, the son of the Emperor Tiberius and Vipsania; who was poisoned by Sejanus, in 23, A. D.

Dry'ades, nymphs of the woods.

Du'bris Portus, the Roman name of Dover in England.

Dui'lius, Cai'us, the Roman commander who in 200, B. C., gained the first naval victory obtained by the Romans; in memory of which a column was set up in the forum.

Echid'na, a legendary monster, the mother of the Chimæra, killed by Argus.

E'cho, a nymph who pined away for love of Narcissus till she was only a voice; or, as other legends say, one so changed by Juno, for assisting Jupiter in deceiving her.

Edes'sa, a city of Mesopotamia, and the capital of a kingdom so called from the 2nd century, B. C., to the 3rd century, A. D.

Ege'ria, a nymph who was said to have instructed Numa Pompilius in legislation.

Elaga'balus, Mar'cus, Aure'lius Anton'i'nus, Roman Emperor from 218 to 222, A. D. He was a mere boy, but he fell behind none of the worst of the Emperors in the filthiest vices,—and was finally killed by the soldiers.

Elect'ra, the daughter of Agamemnon, who instigated Orestes to murder their mother Clytemnestra and Ægisthus.

Eleu'sis, a city of Attica, where the mysteries of Ceres, or Demeter, were celebrated.

El'is, a country of Peloponnesus, on the north-west coast, bounded by Achaia, Arcadia, and Messenia. It was known in the Grecian world as the seat of Olympia, where the Panhellenic games were celebrated.

Elyma'is, a country of Persia, called Elam in the Old Testament.

Elys'ium, the fabled abode of the blessed, situated either in the western ocean or in the under world, according to different poets.

Emped'ocles, a Sicilian philosopher, said to have thrown himself into Mount Ætna that the people might think him a god. He flourished in the 5th century, B. C.

Encel'adus, one of the Titans, having 100 arms, who made war on Jupiter, and was buried by him under Mount Ætna.

Endym'ion, a beautiful shepherd, beloved by Diana as Phœbe or the Moon, said to lie in a perpetual slumber on Mount Latmos.

En'nius, a Roman poet, who flourished in about the beginning of the 2nd century, B. C.

E'os, the Greek name for Aurora.

Epaminon'das, the great general and statesman of Thebes, who defeated the Spartans in the battles of Leuctra and Mantineia, in the last of which he fell. Whilst he lived Thebes was the leading state in Greece; and it was the only time that it rose to such an eminence. The period of his military and political command extended from 379 to 362 B. C.

Eph'esus, the principal city of Ionia in Asia Minor, celebrated as the site of the splendid temple of Diana, which was one of the wonders of the Ancient World. It obtained a better renown after the coming of our Lord as the seat of a Christian Church.

Evan' der, a son of Mercury, and king of Arcadia, who was, according to the legends, an early colonizer and civilizer of Italy.

FA'BII, an ancient and powerful family at Rome.

Fabius, Kæ'so, Vibula'nus, the head of the family of the Fabii, early in the 5th century. The patricians were so highly exasperated against him and his house for siding with the plebeians against them, that the Fabii adopted the resolution of withdrawing from Rome. For about two years they maintained their ground near the Cremera; but in 477, B. C., they were all, with the exception of one man, destroyed by the people of Veii.

Fabius, Quintus Maximus, a great Roman general in the wars with Hannibal. Being appointed dictator in 217, B. C., when the Carthaginians invaded Italy, he wearied them out with the perpetual menace of an attack, and was called Cunctator, the Delayer, on account of this strategy.

Fabricius, Cai'us, a celebrated Roman in the best times of the republic. His integrity and simplicity were the constant themes of admiration in after ages, which would not imitate them. Being ambassador to Pyrrhus, who was at war with Rome, he disclosed to him the plot of his own physician to poison him. He flourished in the early part of the 3rd century, B. C.

Falerii, an Etruscan town, which was taken by Camillus, in the beginning of the 4th century, B. C.

Fates. [Parcæ.]

Faunus and Fauni, rustic deities, resembling Pan and the Satyrs.

Faustina, the name of the wives of the Emperors Antoninus Pius and Marcus Aurelius, both of whom were infamously profligate.

Felix, Antoni'us, the Roman procurator of Judæa about the middle of the 1st century, A. D., before whom the Apostle Paul was brought by the Jews.

Fescennia, an Etruscan town, from which the Romans borrowed the jocular and obscene songs called Fescennine.

Gades, a Phœnician town of Spain, now called Cadiz.

Gatu'lia, the country to the south of Numidia and Mauretania in Africa.

Galat'ea, the Nereid beloved by Acis and by Polyphemus the Cyclops.

Galat'ia, a region in the interior of Asia Minor, in which the Gauls, who invaded the country in the 3rd century, B. C., settled. It became a province of Rome in 25, B. C. The Apostle Paul addressed one of his Epistles to the Christians here.

Gal'ba, Ser'vius Sulpic'ius, Emperor of Rome in 68 and 69, A. D. He was murdered by the soldiers when he had held the throne about half a year.

Galenus, Clau'dius, a famous physician, who flourished at Pergamus and at Rome, in the 2nd century, A. D.

Galilæ'a, the northmost of the three divisions into which Palestine was divided in the time of Christ.

Gal'lia, the common name of the countries now called France and Northern Italy. The latter part was called Cisalpine Gaul, and it was subdued by Rome about the end of the 3rd century, B. C. The former, called Transalpine or Further Gaul, or Gaul Proper, was contained by the natural boundaries of the seas, the Pyrenees, the Alps, and the Rhine. Three great tribes anciently possessed it, the Aquitani, the Belgæ, and the Celtæ. It was in part conquered by Rome about the middle of the 2nd century, B. C.; and the whole country was subjugated by Julius Cæsar between the years 58 and 50, B. C. It was overrun again and again by hordes of barbarians during the lingering fall of the Western Empire, and at the end of the 5th century, A. D., became the seat of the Frankish monarchy under Clovis.

Gal'lus, Trébonia'nus, Emperor of Rome from 251 to 254, A. D.

Ga'za, a city of the Philistines near the sea-coast, besieged and taken by Alexander the Great.

Gedro'sia, a province of Persia, now Beloochistan.

Gel'lius, Aul'us, a Roman writer, who flourished in the 2nd century, A. D.

Gel'on, a tyrant of Gela, in Sicily, and of Syracuse, in the beginning of the 5th century, B. C.

Gen'ii, the name of guardian spirits or demons, who protected men, and presided over all the circumstances, &c., of social and domestic life.

Gen'seric, the king of the Vandals, in the 5th century, A. D.; who erected a kingdom in northern Africa, and in the year 455, A. D., sacked Rome.

Germa'nia, the country lying north and east of the Roman provinces, Gallia, Helvetia, and Dacia; inhabited by many Teutonic tribes, who were never subjugated, bearing the general name of Germans. The historian Tacitus wrote a most interesting and valuable account of these people; heightening, however, every favourable trait, for the purpose of condemning the luxury and degradation of the Romans of his age. They appear to have been a rude but simple and courageous people; and in many respects displayed then characteristics similar to those which the later history of England and Europe has made all men familiar with.

Germa'nicus Cæ'sar, the son of Nero Claudius Drusus, whose courage and conduct had nearly added Germany to the Roman Empire in the years 11 to 17, A. D. But he was recalled by Tiberius, and appointed to another command, in which he was poisoned by the Emperor's orders, in 19, A. D. He was the darling of the people, but his children, Caligula and Agrippina, were wholly unworthy of him.

Ger'yon, the three-headed king of Spain, whose oxen Hercules stole.

Ge'ta, Septim'us, brother and joint emperor with Caracalla, and murdered by him, in 212, A. D.

Gigan'tes, the Roman name of the Titans, but sometimes represented as distinct from them.

Glauc'us, the Lycian prince, son of Hippolochus, who exchanged arms with Diomedes in token of family ties, in one of the battles of the Iliad.—A sea-god, who was at first only a fisherman; and whose oracles were highly prized, so said the legends, by fishermen.

Gordia'nus, Mar'cus Anto'nus, the names of three successive Roman Emperors, who reigned from 238 to 244, A. D. The father and son reigned not a quarter of a year, when the son was killed in battle, and the father killed himself. The grandson (who was but a boy) was next made emperor, after the murder of two other shadowy occupants of the throne; and he was murdered before he reached manhood.

Gord'ium, a city of Phrygia, where was the "Gordian Knot," by severing which Alexander the Great showed himself the predestined lord of Asia.

Gorgo'nes, the three monstrous daughters of Phoreys and Ceto, named Stheno, Euryale, and Medusa; they had wings and brazen talons, and snakes instead of hair.

Goth'i, a Teutonic tribe, which originally inhabited the country now called Prussia; but which, in the decline of the Empire, made a descent upon Dacia, and the adjoining border lands. Aurelius gave up Dacia to them, and part of them (then called Ostrogoths) forced their way further into the Empire, and eventually conquered Italy; whilst the others (called Visigoths), after invading Italy and taking Rome, conquered Spain.

Grac'hus, Tiber'ius Sempro'nus, a famous political leader of Rome, whose name is indissolubly connected with an attempt to make the Agrarian Laws more than a dead letter. By this means he brought down on himself the hatred of the nobles, and was murdered by one of them during an election, in 132, B. C., which they feared he would win.

Grac'hus, Cai'us Sempro'nus, brother of Tiberius Gracchus; and like him a reformer. The nobles artfully proposed measures more popular than those which he brought forward, and turned the popular feeling away from him, when they commenced the repeal of all the reforms he had effected. On his opposing this, they raised a faction fight, and massacred thousands of his adherents in the streets and in the prisons. He had himself put to death by his own slave, that he might not fall into their hands, in 121, B. C.

Græ'cia, the Roman name for Hellas.

Græ'cia Mag'na, an ancient name of the southern part of Italy, in which were situated many Greek cities and colonies.

Grani'cus, a river of Asia Minor, at which Alexander the Great totally routed the Persians, in 334, B. C.

Gratiæ, the three virgin attendants on Venus, Aglaia, Euphrosyne, and Thalia, the daughters of Jupiter.

Gratia'nus Augus'tus, Emperor of the West from 367 to 383, A. D., when he was killed by Maximus.

Hal'ys, the principal river of Asia Minor, now called Kizil Irmak.

Hamadry'ades. [Dry'ades.]

Ham'ilcar Bar'ca, a celebrated Carthaginian general, who distinguished himself in the 1st Punic war, between 247 and 241 B. C., and who subdued great part of Spain before the year 229, B. C., in which he died.

Han'nibal, the famous Carthaginian general, son of Hamilcar Barca, born in 247, B. C., and made, whilst yet a child, to swear eternal hostility to Rome. In the year 221 he was made commander of the armies in Spain by the soldiers themselves, and prosecuted the war with such vigour and success, as to provoke the fears of Rome, and lead to the 2nd Punic war. Hannibal immediately set out for Italy, crossed the Alps in 218, B. C., inflicted on the Romans the terrible defeat at the Lake Trasimene in the following year, and in the year after that, the far more frightful disaster at Cannæ. He then spent the winter at Capua, after which, although he kept his ground in Italy until the year 203, B. C., the balance of advantage was always more and more in favour of Rome. In 202, B. C., he was routed by Scipio at Zama, and peace was made the next year. Not long after this, Hannibal having lost the prestige of success, was sacrificed by one of the parties in the state, and went into exile. He first found refuge with Antiochus of Syria, but when he was defeated by Rome in 190, B. C., Hannibal was compelled to seek another asylum, which he found with Prusias, king of the petty state of Bithynia. Here he lived until the growing power of Rome enabled it to demand his surrender, whereupon, in 183, B. C., he poisoned himself, as the last resource left him.

Harmo'dius, an Athenian, who, in conjunction with his friend Aristogiton, slew Hipparchus, the tyrant of Athens. The two friends lost their own lives, but their deed led the way to the freedom of their country.

Harmo'nia, a daughter of Jupiter and Venus, married, according to the legends, to Cadmus.

Harpalus, a Macedonian who attempted, by means of wealth he had appropriated when treasurer to Alexander the Great, to raise a party against him at Athens. See Demosthenes.

Har'pyiæ, the winged monsters, whom Virgil represents Æneas as meeting with in one of the islands called Strophades. They are spoken of by other poets.

Has'drubal, a brother of Hannibal, defeated and slain near the Metaurus, in 207, B. C., when he had invaded Italy to reinforce the Carthaginians.

He'be, the goddess of youth, and cup-bearer of the gods, married to Hercules after his apotheosis.

He'brus, a famous river of Thrace.

Hecatæ'us, one of the first Greek historians, who flourished at Miletus in the beginning of the 5th century, B. C.

Hec'ate, a three-formed goddess, by some identified with Diana, who was regarded as possessed of great power, especially over the infernal regions, and as the patroness of sorcery and magic.

Hec'tor, the eldest son of Priam, king of Troy, and the great hero of his country during the Trojan war. He is represented in the Iliad as brave in battle, wise in council, a tender and devoted son and husband. When Achilles allowed his friend Patroclus to engage in the fight in his arms, he fell before the spear of Hector, and it was then that Achilles resumed his activity, and slew the Trojan hero, and insultingly dragged his corpse round the city, at the tail of his chariot; but he afterwards gave it up to Priam to be buried.

Hec'uba, the wife of Priam and mother of Hector. When Troy was taken she was made a slave by the Greeks, and was, according to the legend, turned into a dog.

Hel'ena, the daughter of Jupiter and Leda, and sister of Castor and Pollux. Theseus forcibly carried her off when very young, but her brothers rescued her. Afterwards, on account of her extraordinary beauty, all the princes of Greece sought her hand; and she married Menelaus, the other suitors being bound to join him in protecting her. She was carried off from him, not unconsenting, by Paris, and the Trojan war was the result. She married Deiphobus, a brother of Paris, after his death; and when Troy was taken, returned to her first injured husband. But the poets are not agreed as to the manner of her death.

Hel'enus, a son of Priam, who was a prophet, and was allotted to Pyrrhus when Troy was taken; after his death in Epirus he became king of part of that country.

He'liadæ, the daughters of the Sun, and sisters of Phæthon, who were (as the legends told) changed into poplars as they wept their brother's miserable end.

Hel'ice, the daughter of Lycaon, who was turned into a bear by Juno, and placed amongst the stars by Jupiter.

Hel'icon, a mountain-range of Boeotia, dedicated to Apollo and the Muses.

He'liopolis, a celebrated city of Egypt, not far from Memphis, called On in the Old Testament.

Hel'ios, the Greek name of the Sun-god.

Hel'las, the native name of ancient Greece.

Hel'le, the daughter of Athamas and Nephele, after whom the Hellespont was named.

Hel'en, the legendary eponymous progenitor of the Greeks.

Helle'nes, the native name of the ancient Greeks.

Hellespon'tus, the straits now called the Dardanelles.

Helo'tes, a people of Laconia, who were reduced to slavery by the Spartans, and formed the subject population of their state.

Helve'tii, a brave people, who held that part of the country now called Switzerland, which lies between the Lakes of Constance and Geneva. They came occasionally into conflict with the Romans, at the end of the 2nd century, B. C. And they were conquered by Julius Cæsar in 58, B. C., when they were attempting to find a new home in Gaul.

Hephæ'stion, a friend of Alexander the Great, who was deified by him, after his death in 325, B. C.

Hephæstus, the Greek name of Vulcan.
He'ra, the Greek name of Juno.

Heracle'a, a city of Pontus in Asia Minor, so named (as many cities of the ancient world were) in honour of Hercules.

Heracli'dæ, the descendants of Hercules, who took part in the conquest of the Peloponnesus by the Dorians.

Heracli'tus, a celebrated Greek philosopher of Ephesus, who flourished in the 6th century, and was said to have bewailed the ignorance and folly of men so much, as to obtain the name of the Weeping Philosopher.

Hercula'neum, a city of Campania, overwhelmed by the same eruption of Vesuvius which destroyed Pompeii, in 79, A. D.

Her'cules, or Heracl'es, the great legendary hero of Greece, the son of Jupiter and Alcmena, endowed with prodigious strength by his father, and pursued with unrelenting hatred by Juno. The legends about him are innumerable, but the most famous are those of his 12 labours; which were, his killing the Lion of Nemea; the destruction of the Lernaean Hydra; his capture of the golden-antlered Arcadian stag; his killing the Erymanthean boar, the cleansing of the Augean stables; the killing the birds of Lake Stymphalis, the capture of the wild bull of Crete; the capture of the anthropophagous mares of Diomedes of Thrace; the procuring of the girdle of the Queen of the Amazons; the capture of Geryon's oxen; the procuring the golden apples of the Hesperides; and the bringing to the upper world the dog Cerberus. He was poisoned by the treachery of Nessus the Centaur, by means of his wife Dejanira, and he was taken to Olympus, as he was preparing to ascend his own funeral pile on Mount Ceta.

Her'culis Colum'næ, the name given to the two headlands on the opposite sides of the Straits of Gibraltar.

Hercyn'ia Silva, a mountain-forest of Germany, now called the Harz.

Hermaphrodit'us, the son of Venus and Mercury (called so after their Greek names), whose beauty so won the affections of Salmacis that the gods granted her wish to be incorporated with him, in one body, as the legends say.

Her'mes, the Greek name of Mercury.

Hermi'one, the daughter of Menelaus and Helen, married first to Pyrrhus, son of Achilles, and afterwards to Orestes.

Her'mus, a river of Asia Minor, the sands of which abounded with gold.

He'ro, a priestess of Venus, at Sestos, to visit whom Leander used to swim across the Hellespont from Abydos.—A famous mathematician of Alexandria, who flourished in the 3rd century, B. C.

Hero'des, or Her'od the Great, king of the Jews, an Idumæan by birth, and made king by the triumvirs in 40, B. C. He is famed in history for his cruelty; and one of his latest acts was the massacre of the Innocents, which he ordered in the hope of killing him who (the Magi had told him) was "born king of the Jews!" He died in 4, B. C.

Hero'des An'tipas, tetrarch of Galilee, who put to death John the Baptist for denouncing his incestuous marriage with Herodias, his brother Philip's wife; and was reconciled to Pontius Pilate on the occasion of the crucifixion of Christ.

Hero'des Agrip'pa, king of Judæa and the neighbouring countries, who killed the Apostle James (brother to John), and put the Apostle Peter in prison, and died of a loathsome disease in the same year.

Herod'otus, the first real historian of Greece, commonly called the "Father of History." He travelled in Egypt, and in many countries of Asia and Europe; and wrote the results of his observations in nine books, named after the nine Muses. His work is of incalculable value, and of great interest, from its simplicity, religiousness, and general truthfulness. He flourished in the 5th century, B. C., and was born at Halicarnassus and died at Thurii.

Heros'tratus, the Ephesian who burned down the temple of Diana, in the year 356, B. C., on the birth-night of Alexander the Great.

Heru'li, a Teutonic and Scandinavian tribe, which gave the death-blow to the Empire of the West, under Odoacer, in 476, A. D.

He'siodus, a Greek poet of Bœotia, who flourished in the 8th century, B. C. His two surviving poems are exceedingly valuable as amongst the earliest writings of Greece.

He'sione, the daughter of Laomedon and sister of Priam, delivered by Hercules from being devoured by a sea-monster.

Hesper'ia, a Greek name for Italy.

Hesper'ides, the daughters of Atlas and Hesperis, who had the keeping of the golden apples in their gardens, near Mount Atlas in Africa.

Hesperus, a name of the evening star.

Hestia, the Greek name of Vesta.

Hiber'nia, or Ier'ne, the ancient name of Ireland.

Hi'eron, tyrant of Syracuse from 478 to 467, B. C.—Another ruler of Syracuse, from 270 to 216, B. C.

Hieroso'lyma, a name of Jerusalem.

Hippar'chus, one of the sons of Pisistratus, killed by Harmodius, in 514, B. C.—A celebrated Greek astronomer, who flourished in the 2nd century, B. C.

Hipp'ias, one of the sons of Pisistratus, expelled from Athens in 510, B. C.

Hippoc'rates, a celebrated Greek physician, who flourished in the 5th century, B. C.

Hippocre'ne, a fountain in Mount Helicon, sacred to Apollo.

Hippodami'a, the daughter of Enomaus, whom Pelops obtained as his wife, by conquering her in a chariot-race.

Hippol'yte, a queen of the Amazons, said by some legends to have been killed by Hercules, and by others to have been married to Theseus.

Hippol'ytus, the son of Theseus and Hippolyte, according to the legend, who was put to death by his father, on being falsely accused by his step-mother Phedra. It is said that Æsculapius restored him to life again.

Hippom'enes, the successful suitor of Atalanta, who conquered her in running.

ÆTAS SAPIENTIÆ CONDIMENTUM EST.—AGE SEASONS' AND TEMPER WISDOM.

QUOD ODERIS ALTERI NE FECERIS.—AVOID WHAT YOU SEE AMISS IN OTHERS.

Hispa'nia, the country now called Spain and Portugal. It was inhabited by Iberians and Celts, and both the Phœnicians and the Carthaginians had settlements in it; and the latter, in the 3rd century, B. C., possessed almost the whole of it. It was not completely conquered by the Romans till the time of Augustus. When the Roman Empire fell, it was conquered first by the Vandals, and afterwards by the Goths, who established themselves there, and founded the modern Spanish monarchy.

Histiæ'us, the tyrant of Miletus, who headed the revolt of Isnia in 496, B. C.

Homér'us, the most renowned epic poet of antiquity. He was a native of Asia Minor, but the place of his birth is unknown; he is called the son of Mæon, and is said to have been blind, but his life is so completely legendary, that some critics have disputed the fact of his existence. He flourished in the 9th century, B. C. His great poems are the Iliad and the Odyssey; but others are also ascribed to him.

Hono'rius, Fla'vius, Emperor of the West from 395 to 423, A. D.

Hon'os, or Hon'or, a Roman divinity, whose worship was intimately connected with that of Virtus.

Ho'ræ, the daughters of Jupiter and Themis. Their number and names are variously stated by different poets; but they appear to have been the goddesses of the seasons.

Hora'tii. See Curiatii.

Hora'tius, Quin'tus, Fla'cus, the famous Roman lyric poet and satirist. He was well educated, and by the patronage of Mecænas was enabled to devote himself to his favourite pursuit. The favour of the Emperor Augustus naturally followed the friendship of Mecænas, and the poet enjoyed whilst living the rewards which are so frequently delayed till after death. He was born in 65, B. C., and died in the year 8, B. C. His works are the most widely read and appreciated, perhaps, of all the classics.

Horten'sia, the daughter of the orator Hortensius, who inherited her father's eloquence, and pleaded in behalf of the ladies of Rome, before the triumvirs, in 43, B. C.

Horten'sius, Quin'tus, a Roman orator, who distinguished himself as a public speaker before he was 20 years of age, and continued unsurpassed in eloquence until the most splendid period of the life of his friend and successor, Cicero. He died in 50, B. C., before the fall of the republic.

Ho'rus, the Egyptian sun-god, who was worshipped in Rome also.

Hun'ni, a race of Asiatic Tatars, who migrated into Europe, and settled in Thrace in the 4th century, A. D. Under Attila they became most formidable to the Empire, but their conquests and their fame quickly passed away.

Hyacin'thus, a beautiful Spartan youth, beloved (say the legends) by both Apollo and Zephyrus; who being killed by the spite of the latter, was commemorated by Apollo in the hyacinth which sprang from his blood.

Hy'ades, seven nymphs, said by some to be the daughters of Atlas, changed by Jupiter into stars.

Hy'as, the brother of the Hyades, who was killed by a lioness.

Hy'bla, the name of a town of Sicily, famous for its honey.

Hydas'pes, the river of India now called the Jelum.

Hy'dra, a monstrous 7-headed serpent, destroyed by Hercules.

Hyge'ia, the goddess of health.

Hy'las, the beautiful son of Theodamas, beloved by Hercules, and carried off by the Naiads, according to the legend of the Argonauts.

Hyl'lus, the son of Hercules and Deianira.

Hy'men, the god of marriage.

Hymet'tus, a mountain near Athens, famous for its honey.

Hyperbo'rei, a people who were fabled to live beyond Scythia to the north, in perpetual spring.

Hyperides, an orator of Athens, who flourished along with Demosthenes.

Hyperion, one of the Titans.—A name of the sun.

Hypermetra, the Danaid who did not murder her bridegroom.

Hypsip'yle, the queen of Lemnos, banished, according to the story, for saving her father's life when all the men of the island were murdered.

Hyrcania, a region of Persia, bordering on the Caspian Sea, which was often called the Hyrcanian Sea, after it.

Hyrcanus, John, the son of Simon Macabæus, who ruled in Judæa from 153 to 106, B. C.

IACCHUS, the Eleusinian name of Bacchus.

Iam'be, a slave of Eleusis, who was said by the legend to have comforted Ceres, and to have invented Iambics.

Iamblichus, a Greek philosopher of the 4th century, A. D.

Iapetus, a Titan, the father of Prometheus.

Iapygia, the south-eastern part of Italy, called so after Iapyx.

Iapyx, a mythic colonizer of the south of Italy.

Iberia, a country of Asia, between the Euxine and the Caspian. See Hispania.

Iberus, a river of Spain, called the Ebro.

Icarus. See Dædalus.

Iceni, a people of Britain, inhabiting the eastern counties of England, whose chief town was Norwich, called by the Romans Venta Icenorum.

Ichthyoph'agi, a people which lived on the coasts of the Red Sea.

Ida, a mountain-range not far from Troy.—A mountain of Crete, sacred to Jupiter.

Idas, the son of Aphareus, who was preferred by Marpessa to Apollo.

Idomeneus, a king of Crete, who sacrificed his son in fulfilment of a vow, and was banished.

Idumæa, or E'dom, the country lying to the south and south-east of the land of Canaan. The people attained a considerable degree of civilization, as the ruins of Petra still testify.

Ilione, a daughter of Priam, king of Troy, married to Polymnestor.

Ilis'sus, a river of Athens.

Ilium, the Greek name of Troy.

Illyria, or Illyricum, a country on the eastern coast of the Adriatic, bounded by Pannonia, Mœsia, Macedonia, and Epirus. It was subject to Macedonia for a short time; and afterwards caused great annoyance to Rome by the piratical habits of its inhabitants. It was conquered by Rome in 168, B. C.

Ilus, the mythic founder of Troy.

Im'bros, an island of the Ægean, where the Cabiric mysteries were observed.

Inachus, the first king of Argos, a legendary person, son of Oceanus and Tethys.

Inarus, a Libyan, who endeavoured unsuccessfully to free Lower Egypt from the Persian yoke in the 5th century, B. C.

India, the ancient name of all that part of southern Asia which extended from Persia to Serica. The knowledge possessed of this portion of the world was extremely small, and dates from the expedition of Alexander the Great. Seleucus Nicator extended the conquests of the Greeks beyond the furthest point reached by Alexander. Ptolemy learned more from subsequent travellers, and his great division of the country into India within and beyond the Ganges has remained to the present day.

Indus, the great river of India, from which its name was derived.

Io, the daughter of Inachus, whom Jupiter was said to have loved, and, for fear of Juno, to have changed into a cow. She is represented as tormented by a gadfly sent by Juno, and to have wandered through various countries, crossing the Bosporus, and at last resting in Egypt. She is supposed to be the Isis of the Egyptians.

Iolaus, the nephew and companion of Hercules, who was said to have aided him in conquering the Hydra.

Ion, the eponymous ancestor of the Ionians.

Ionica, a country of the Ægean sea-coast of Asia Minor, colonized by Ionian Greeks; and the region most fruitful in the choicest productions of Hellenic genius. It was generally subject to Persia; but was for a time in subject-alliance with Athens. [See names of Greek cities, historians, philosophers, poets, and painters.]

Ionium Mare, the name of the part of the Mediterranean next below the Adriatic.

Iphicles, the twin brother of Hercules, and father of Iolaus.

Iphicrates, an Athenian general, who introduced some advantageous changes into the equipment of the Athenian soldiers, in the 4th century, B. C.

Iphigenia, the daughter of Agamemnon, who, when the Grecian fleet was detained at Aulis, was devoted to death by her father to appease the wrath of Diana; but the goddess, as the legends say, carried Iphigenia away, and made her her priestess at Tauris, from which place her brother, Orestes, carried her back to Greece.

Iphis, a maiden of Crete, who was (as the legends tell) changed into a man, when betrothed to the beautiful Ianthé.

Iphitus, the institutor or reviver of the Olympic Games, who was king of Elis in the 9th century, B. C.

Ira, a Messenian stronghold, which held out against the Spartans for 11 years, in the Messenian war.

Pris, according to some of the poets, the messenger of the gods; and, as others say, a daughter of Thaumás, changed into a rainbow.

Isæus, one of the famous orators of Athens, before the time of Demosthenes, who is said to have been his pupil.

Isis, a divinity of Egypt, said to be the wife of Osiris. She was worshipped at Rome, when the republic had become mistress of Egypt.

Isocrates, a famous Athenian orator, who flourished in the 4th century, B. C.

Issus, the scene of the great defeat inflicted by Alexander the Great on Darius, in 333, B. C.

Ister, a name of the Danube.

Italia, a name which in the early times applied only to the southern half of the country at present called Italy; but which subsequently acquired its more extended signification.

Ithaca, an island of the Ionian Sea, which was the seat of the kingdom of Ulysses.

Ituræa, a country to the east of the sea of Tiberias in Syria, which formed part of the dominions of Herod Philip.

Itys, the son of Tereus, whom his mother, Procne, killed and served at table.

Ixion, the king of the Lapithæ, and father of the Centaurs, by a cloud resembling Juno, which Jupiter sent to him when he aspired to the love of the Queen of Olympus. He was (as the poets said) fastened to an ever-turning wheel in the infernal regions.

JANICULUM, one of the seven hills of Rome, on the west of the Tiber.

Janus, the Roman divinity, to whom the first month of the year, January, was consecrated, and whose temple was always closed in times of general peace, which is said to have happened only in the reign of Numa Pompilius, and in that of the Emperor Augustus.

Ja'son, the son of Æson, and leader of the Argonautic expedition. He married Medea, by whose help he had acquired possession of the golden fleece; but afterwards he left her and married the daughter of Creon. The legends are not agreed as to the manner of his death.

Jericho, a city of Canaan, which was the first taken by the Israelites when they conquered that country.

Jerusalem, the chief city of Palestine, which retains its name to the present day. During the existence of the Jewish kingdom it shared its fortunes; and when the Jews rebelled against the Romans, it was taken and destroyed by Titus, after a siege of unexampled horrors. Hadrian changed it into a heathen Roman colonial town, and called it Ælia Capitolina. For its modern history see Chronology and Gazetteer.

Jocasta, the daughter of Creon of Thebes, who is represented, in the legend, as marrying her own son Œdipus. On the discovery of this she killed herself.

Jorda'nes, the principal river of Palestine, running from the Sea of Tiberias into the Dead Sea.

Jose'phus, Fla'vius, the celebrated Jewish historian, who flourished in the 1st century, A. D., and whose writings are of the highest value to the student of sacred history.

Jovia'nus, Fla'vius Clau'dius, Emperor of Rome in 363 and 364, A. D.

Ju'ba, the son of the last king of Numidia, who was made titular king of Numidia first, and afterwards of Mauretania, by Augustus.

Judæ'a, the southern part of the country of Palestine, as it was divided at the time of our Lord.

Judæ'i, the Roman name of the Hebrew people.

Jugur'tha, the king of Numidia at the end of the 2nd century, B. C. He was the grandson of Massanissa, but illegitimate, and brought up by Micipsa, along with his own sons, and left a share of the kingdom by him at his death. He, however, murdered both of them, and made himself master of the whole. The Romans therefore made war on him, and after a long struggle he was conquered, made prisoner, led in triumph by Marius, and starved to death in prison at Rome.

Jul'ia, the daughter of Julius Cæsar, married to Pompey, whose sudden death broke the bond between the two who were the greatest men in Rome.—The daughter of Augustus, married several times, and always for political reasons. She was so infamous in her conduct that Augustus banished her, and she died in exile.

Julia'nus, Fla'vius Clau'dius, called the Apostate, Emperor of Rome from 361 to 363, A. D. He was one of the best emperors of the later period, but he is better remembered by his unwise and necessarily unsuccessful attempt to restore the effete and dethroned paganism of Rome.

Ju'no, the daughter of Saturn and Rhea, and wife of her brother Jupiter, with whom she ruled over Olympus. The legends represent her as haughty, jealous, and implacable. Her married life, by her shameful brawls with her husband, was a most unseemly example to mortals, who regarded her the presiding deity over the conjugal state. She also presided over childbirth. Her children were Mars, Hebe, and Vulcan. Various stories respecting her will be found scattered through this Dictionary. The peacock was sacred to her.

Ju'piter, the son of Saturn and Rhea, and king of Olympus, or heaven. The mythic stories respecting him varied very greatly at different ages, but they agree in representing his life as saved with difficulty from his father in his infancy; and they say that he was brought up by the Corybantes, and suckled by Amalthea. His war with the Titans, and their overthrow, are the subjects of the most dignified stories concerning him, most of which relate to his endless and abominable adulteries, and his worse than human weaknesses. The names of many of his mistresses and of his children will be found in this Dictionary. The eagle was sacred to him. His statues exhibit him as possessed of great dignity and force, and agree very well with the popular notion of him, which made him the supreme and all-counselling deity.

Justinia'nus, Fla'vius Anic'ius, Emperor of Rome from 527 to 565, A. D. His empire was maintained by the arms of Belisarius and Narses, and his reign was especially distinguished by his causing the compilation of what is now known as the Body of Roman Law; a work which has formed the basis of modern law in Europe.

Justi'nus, a Roman historian of the period of the empire, who is known only by his work. [Trogus.]

Juvena'lis, Dec'imus Ju'nius, the most celebrated Roman satirist, who flourished at the end of the 1st century, A. D.

LAB'DACUS, the father of Laius, and grandfather of Œdipus.

La'beo, Antist'ius, a Roman lawyer, who flourished immediately before the Christian æra.

Labi'enus, Ti'tus, the lieutenant of Julius Cæsar during the Gallic war, who afterwards joined Pompey.

Lacedæ'mon, a name for Sparta.

Lach'esis, the name of one of the Fates.

Laco'nia, a country occupying the southeastern promontory of Peloponnesus, bounded by Argolis, Arcadia, and Messenia. It is known in history chiefly by its principal city Sparta, and by the peculiarly brusque terseness of speech cultivated by its people, which is still commemorated in our common adjective "laconic."

Læ'lius, Cai'us, Sa'piens, an eminent Roman, who was so famous on account of his friendship for the Younger Scipio Africanus, that Cicero introduced him as the chief speaker in his Essay "On Friendship."

Læ'nas, Cai'us Popil'lius, a Roman ambassador, who was sent to Antiochus of Syria, to prevent him from making war on Egypt, and, not receiving a satisfactory answer, drew a line in the sand round the king, and charged him not to cross it until he had returned a fitting reply to the senate; whereupon Antiochus gave up his design on Alexandria.

Laer'tes, the father of Ulysses.

Læstry'gones, a fabled race of cannibals, placed by different poets in Sicily or Italy.

La'is, one of the celebrated courtesans of Greece, equally famed for her wit, wealth, and beauty.

Lai'us, the father of Œdipus, killed by his son, in ignorance of his person.

La'mia, a horrid fabulous female monster.

La'mia, a town of Thessaly, in which Antipater was besieged, when the Greeks confederated and revolted at the death of Alexander, in 323, B. C.

Lamp'sacus, a town on the Asiatic coast of the Hellespont, famous for its wine.

Laoc'oön, the priest of Apollo at Troy, who suspecting evil would have prevented the admission of the wooden horse, and was killed, together with his sons, as the legends relate, by two great sea-serpents sent by Neptune.

Laodami'a, the wife of Protesilaus, who obtained from the gods (so the legend says) that her husband should return from the dead for a few hours; and who died when the period expired.

Laodice'a, the name of several cities in the ancient Syrian Empire, which were so called after wives and daughters of the Seleucidæ, called Laodice. The one in Phrygia, mentioned several times in the New Testament, is the best known.

Laom'edon, king of Troy, and father of Priam. His refusal to observe the terms of the engagement made with Neptune and Apollo (when, according to the legend, they were expelled by Jupiter from Olympus), procured for his country the abiding anger of Neptune. Another violation of his word provoked the wrath of Hercules, who attacked Troy, and killed Laomedon, and all his sons but Priam. [Hesione.]

Neoptol'emus, or Pyr'rhus, the son of Achilles and Deidamia, who, at the taking of Troy, killed Priam and Polyxena, and had Andromache allotted to him. He was afterwards king of Epirus, and married Hermione, in consequence of which, says the story, Orestes killed him.

Ne'pos, Corné'lius, a Roman biographical writer of the 1st century, B. C.

Neptu'nus, the son of Saturn and Rhea, who was made the god of the sea. The legends respecting him are of the same general character as those already referred to respecting Jupiter. His wife was Amphitrite, and men were said to be indebted for the use of horses to him. The trident was his sceptre and distinguishing symbol.

NE TENTES, AUT PERFICE.—EITHER ATTEMPT NOT, OR ACCOMPLISH.

NE TE QUÆSIVERIS EXTRA.—SEEK NOTHING BEYOND YOUR SPHERE.

Nereides, the fifty sea-nymphs, daughters of Nereis and Doris.

Nereus, a sea-god, the son of Pontus and Terra.

Nero, Claudius Cæsar Dru'sus Germanicus, Emperor of Rome from 54 to 68, A. D. He was the son of Domitius Ahenobarbus, and originally bore that name, but when the Emperor Claudius married Agrippina, she procured his adoption, and at last his appointment as successor in the empire. The history of his reign is a dreadful tale of cruelty, crime, and brutal excess. As an example of the whole it is enough to say that he murdered his mother and his wife. A successful conspiracy at last rid the world of his unendurable tyranny. Rome was burnt down in his reign, and he sang a poem of his own composition on the destruction of Troy, whilst the flames were raging; and made the conflagration a pretext for persecuting the Christians.

Nerva, Marcus Cocceius, Emperor of Rome from 96 to 98, A. D.; a mild and virtuous prince, but lacking the force effectually to check the rapid decline of the Empire.

Nervi, a people of Gaul, of the Belgic race.

Nessus, the centaur, who gave his garment poisoned by Hercules' arrows to Deianira, with which she ignorantly occasioned his death, according to the legendary tale.

Nestor, the king of Pylos, and son of Neleus, celebrated in the Iliad for his wisdom which his great age had brought. He had seen three generations of men (the legends declare), having in his younger days shared in the battle of the Centaurs and Lapithæ, the voyage of the Argo, and the Calydonian hunt.

Octavianus. [Augustus.]

Odena'thus, the king of Palmyra, and husband of Zenobia.

Odod'cer, the Herulian king, who put an end to the Empire of the West in 476, A. D., and made himself king of Italy.

Odrys'æ, a tribe of Thracians.

Odys'seus, the Greek name of Ulysses.

Œdipus, the legendary king of Thebes, and son of Laius and Jocasta. The oracle stated that he would murder his father, who therefore exposed him on Mount Cithæron: but his life was preserved by a shepherd, and he was brought up as the son of the king of Corinth. Learning his future destiny from the oracle at Delphi, he determined to avoid Corinth; and on his journey met with his real father, and slew him in a casual dispute. He next delivered Thebes, by answering the riddle of the Sphinx, and obtained the throne, and was married to his own mother. A plague ravaged the country, as a punishment for their unconscious incest; and the oracle commanded the murderer of Laius to be banished. Œdipus hereupon discovered through Tiresias that he was the man, and thus learned his true history; Jocasta in consequence killed herself, and he, having blinded himself, wandered as far as the grove of the Furies, at Colonus near Athens, where he was taken away. But other legends tell his story differently.

Œneus, a king of Ætolia, whose kingdom was ravaged by the Calydonian boar; and who was dethroned by his brother, and killed by his nephews, according to the legend.

Under the direction of Pericles he adorned the Parthenon with those magnificent sculptures, the relics of which are now to be seen in the British Museum, and with a chryselephantine figure of Minerva. A similar statue of Jupiter Olympus was made by him for the temple of that god at Olympia. He was persecuted as the friend of Pericles; and having conferred immortal renown on Athens by his genius, he died in prison there in the year 432, B. C.

Phi'don, the king of Argos in the 8th century, B. C., who is celebrated as the inventor or regulator of the coinage and weights and measures of Greece.

Philadel'phia, a city of Lydia in Asia Minor, where there was a Christian church at the time of the writing of the book of Revelation.

Philæ'ni, two brothers of Carthage, who, according to the legend, consented to be buried alive, rather than suffer the territory claimed by their country to be lessened.

Phile'mon, a comic poet of Athens, who flourished in the 4th century, B. C.

Philip'pi, a city of Macedonia, near which, in 42, B. C., Brutus and Cassius were defeated by Octavian and Antony, and killed themselves. The apostle Paul planted Christianity here, and addressed to the church here one of his Epistles.

Philip'pus the Second, king of Macedonia from 359 to 336, B. C., who won for that state the absolute supremacy of Greece. He was brought up at Thebes, whither he was sent as a hostage, and obtained the throne, in defiance of the right of the infant son of his elder brother. His first attacks were directed against the Greek colonies along the northern coast of the Ægean and the Hellespont; and the enfeebled and divided state of Athens enabled him to reduce them, one after another, without any impediment. He next determined to be recognised as a Hellenic king, although Macedonia had always been reckoned "barbarian;" and he succeeded in obtaining the command of the forces raised by the Amphictyonic council for the Sacred War, and the seat of the Phocians in the council, after he had subdued them. Athens, persuaded by Æschines, had looked on hitherto, but now she aroused herself, and it was too late. In the battle of Chæronea, Philip finally subjugated Greece; for there was neither force nor patriotism which Athens did not inspire. And at a great council held at the Isthmus, Philip was nominated by the subject states, commander-in-chief against Persia. It was whilst he was making ready for a war which should avenge the invasions of Darius and Xerxes (and to which his predecessors in Macedonia had consented) that his career was suddenly terminated, for he was assassinated at a festival in the year 336, B. C., by Pausanias; Olympias, his wife, having been privy to the conspiracy.

Philip'pus the Fifth, king of Macedonia from 220 to 178, B. C., who joined the Achæan League against the Ætolians, and was involved on two occasions in hostilities with Rome; and was at last defeated by Flaminius, at Cynosephalæ, in 197, B. C.

Philip'pus, Marcus Ju'lius, Emperor of Rome from 244 to 249, A. D., who associated his son (of the same name) in the empire with him, and perished with him by the hands of the soldiery.

Phi'lo, a Jewish philosophical writer of Alexandria, who flourished in the 1st century, A. D.

Philote'us, the son of Poëas, and friend of Heracles, who, when he died, bestowed on him his bow and arrows. Whilst on the way to Troy, with the Grecian army, he wounded himself in the foot with one of his own arrows, and was left behind at Lemnos; but Troy (say the legends) could not be taken without him, on which account he was fetched from his solitary island, and took part in the last scenes of the war.

Philome'la, the daughter of Pandion, who was outraged by Tereus, her sister's husband, and, according to the legends, turned into a nightingale.

Philopœ'men, the great Achæan general, who was one of the most distinguished Greeks during the latter part of the history of his country. He humbled Sparta, and raised the spirit of the League, and laboured to secure by means of it the restoration of Grecian independence. But in the year 183, B. C., he was made prisoner by the Messenians, and put to death by poison.

Philos'tratus, Fla'vius, a Greek rhetorician of the 3rd century, A. D.

Philo'tas, the son of Parmenion, put to death in 330, B. C., on the ground of a plot against the life of Alexander the Great.

Philox'enus, a Greek poet of the beginning of the 4th century, B. C.

NIMIA FAMILIARITATIS CONTEMPTUM PARIT.—TOO MUCH FAMILIARITY BREEDS CONTEMPT.

UBI LIBERTAS, IBI PATRIA.—WHERE THERE IS LIBERTY, THERE IS MY COUNTRY.

Phin'eas, the son of Agenor, said to have been blinded and harassed by the Harpies, from whom he was delivered by the Argonauts, because he had put out the eyes of his sons.

Phleg'ethon, a flaming river of the infernal regions.

Phleg'yas, the son of Mars, who was said to have set fire to the temple of Apollo, who killed him, and punished him in the infernal regions.

Phlius, a town of Peloponnesus, near Sicyon.

Phocæ'a, a maritime city of Ionia, whose inhabitants settled in Corsica and at Marseilles, when the Persians took it in the 6th century, B. C.

Pho'cion, the great Athenian politician, whose name became proverbial for his justice. He did not join Demosthenes in his opposition to Philip; and he would not encourage the frantic efforts for emancipation made after the death of Alexander. When Polysperchon sent his son to seize Athens in 318, B. C., the people persuaded themselves that Phocion was playing the traitor, and Alexander, to whom he fled, having given him up to them, he was condemned to die as Socrates had died, in 317, B. C. A statue was afterwards erected in honour of him.

Pho'cis, a country of Greece on the north shore of the Corinthian gulf, between Locris, Doris, and Bœotia. Delphi was in its territory; and the principal events in its history were the sacred wars, the second of which lasted for 10 years, and ended in the country being subjugated and ravaged by Philip of Macedonia, in 346, B. C., and the Phocians being struck out of the list of Hellenic people.

Phœ'be, the Greek name of the goddess of the moon.

Phœ'bus, a name of Apollo.

Phœnic'ia, the narrow strip of country, between the mountain-range of Lebanon and the Mediterranean, where were the great and famous cities, Tyre, Sidon, Berytus, &c.

Phœ'nix, the son of Amyntor, who, having been cursed by his father (or blinded, as other legends say), fled to Peleus, and became teacher of Achilles, with whom he went to Troy.

Phor'cys, the son of Pontus and Terra, and father of the Gorgons.

Phrix'us, the son of Athamas and Nephele, who with his sister Helle was about to be sacrificed by Jupiter, but was delivered by his mother, and carried off to Colchis on a golden-fleeced ram. His sister fell into the narrow sea, called after her the Hellespont. The legends further say, that it was to fetch the golden fleece of this ram that the Argonautic expedition was undertaken.

Phrygia, an inland country of Asia Minor, surrounded by Mysia, Lydia, Caria, Lycia, Pisidia, Lycaonia, Galatia, and Bithynia; some of which were in ancient times included within its limits. Its renown is confined to the legendary ages; during the historic period it followed the fortunes of its conquerors.

Phry'nichus, an Athenian tragedian of the 6th century, B. C.

Picent'ia, a town of Italy, now called Vicenza.

Pic'ti, a people of Caledonia, so called from their custom of painting their bodies.

Pi'cus, an Italian rustic god, of whom the legends say that when he was beloved by Circe, and did not return her affection, she turned him into a woodpecker.

Pier'ia, a small country near Mount Olympus.

Pier'ides, a name of the Muses.

Pin'darus, the most celebrated Greek lyric poet, who flourished at the end of the 6th and the former part of the 5th century, B. C. His odes which have been preserved celebrate victories at the Olympic and other games, and are of unsurpassed grandeur and beauty.

Pin'dus, a mountain-range between Thessaly and Epirus.

Piræ'us, the principal port of Athens, which was connected with the city by the fortification known as the "Long Walls."

Pirith'ous, the son of Ixion and king of the Lapithæ; at whose marriage with Hippodamia occurred the legendary and celebrated battle of the Centaurs and the Lapithæ. He was the friend of Theseus, and engaged with him in many renowned exploits.

Pi'sa, a town of the Peloponnesus, whose inhabitants contended with those of Elis, for the honour of celebrating the Olympic games, which led to its destruction.

Pisid'ia, a country in the south of Asia Minor, lying between Phrygia, Pamphylia, and Lycia.

Pisistratus, an Athenian who, after the establishment of the constitution of Solon, in 560, B. C., made himself the tyrant of Athens. He was twice expelled of the city, by the combination of rivals; but succeeded in regaining his lost power. He was the first Greek who bestowed any care on the preservation of the writings of Homer. His sons Hippias and Hipparchus, who were called Pisistratidæ, succeeded him in the year 527, B. C.

Pi'so, Lu'cius Calpurnius Fru'gi, a Roman annalist of the 2nd century, B. C.

Pittacus, of Mytilene, one of the 7 Wise Men of Greece, who flourished in the beginning of the 6th century, B. C.

Placen'tia, a city of Italy, now called Piacenza.

Plan'cus, Lu'cius Muna'tius, consul of Rome in the year 42, B. C. He added to all his other vices that of ingratitude, after he had deserted Mark Antony, and joined Octavian, in 31, B. C.

Platæ'a, a city of Bœotia, near which the Greeks defeated the Persians, under Mardonius, in 479, B. C. It was afterwards taken and destroyed by the Lacedæmonians, in 427, B. C.

Pla'to, one of the most illustrious philosophers of Greece, the disciple of Socrates, and founder of the Academic school, so called because he taught in the grove of Academus at Athens. He was a great promoter of the study of geometry, and his philosophy partakes of the exact character of that science. His writings are numerous, and are greatly admired for their eloquent and pure language, and for the profound truths they embodied. He died in 347, B. C.

Plautus, Titus Mac'cius, a famous Roman comic poet, who flourished in the 3rd century, B. C.

Plei'ades, the 7 daughters of Atlas, who were changed into doves, the legends say, and placed amongst the stars, to rescue them from the pursuit of Orion.

Plin'ius, Cai'us, Secun'dus, or Pliny the Elder, a famous naturalist and literary man of Rome, in the 1st century, A. D. He was suffocated by the sulphurous vapours of the eruption of Mount Vesuvius, in 79, A. D.

Plin'ius, Cai'us Cæcil'ius, Secun'dus, or Pliny the Younger, nephew of the naturalist, and a distinguished literary man of Rome. His letters are exceedingly valuable and interesting; and he died in the beginning of the 2nd century, A. D.

Plotin'us, a celebrated Platonic philosopher of Alexandria and Rome, who flourished in the 3rd century, A. D.

Plutar'chus, the famous philosopher and historical biographer who flourished at Rome during the 1st century, A. D. His Lives of celebrated Greeks and Romans is the most widely-known of his works, and one of the greatest value to the student of ancient history.

Plu'to, the god of the lower world, or the kingdom of the dead. He was, according to the legends, the son of Saturn, and the brother of Jupiter and Neptune, and in the division of the empire of their father had the infernal regions assigned to him. His wife was Proserpine, the daughter of Ceres; and the stories of him are generally of the same kind as those of his brothers.

Plu'tus, the god of riches, the son of Jasion and Ceres, made blind by Jupiter.

Podali'rius, the son of Æsculapius, and one of the physicians in the Grecian camp at the siege of Troy.

Pœ'ni, the name of the people of Carthage.

Pole'mon, a celebrated Greek philosopher of the Platonic school, who flourished in the end of the 4th century, B. C.

Pol'lio, Cai'us Asin'ius, a Roman orator and poet of the 1st century, B. C. He was a partisan of Julius Cæsar, and afterwards of the triumvirs against the conspirators. Both Virgil and Horace were greatly indebted to him, and his own writings and speeches were as famous in his day as those of the great authors of the Augustan age, whose works have survived to our times.

Pol'lux. [Castor.]

Polyb'ius, a Greek historian of the 2nd century, B. C., whose work is of very great value for the times when Rome was, by subjugating Greece, preparing the way for the acquisition of the Empire of the world.

Polycrates, the tyrant of Samos, who was seized by the Persian satrap of Sardis, and crucified in the year 522, B. C.

Polydorus, the youngest son of Priam and Hecuba, who was, according to the legends, killed by Polymnestor, a king of Thrace, for his riches.

Polygnotus, a famous Greek painter who flourished in the 5th century, B. C.

Polyn'ces. [Eteocles.]

Polyphemus, the Cyclops, whom Ulysses was said to have deceived when he was cast ashore on Sicily; and who vainly wooed the nymph Galatea.

Polysperchon, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, who succeeded Antipater as regent of Macedonia. He was defeated by Cassander in 318, B. C., and afterwards played only a subordinate part in the history of Greece.

Polyxena, the daughter of Priam and Hecuba, who was married, after the taking of Troy, to Achilles, and slain by his son Pyrrius, on his father's tomb.

Pomo'na, the goddess of orchards amongst the Romans.

Pompei'i, a city on the sea-coast of Campania, overwhelmed in 79, A. D., by the eruption of Mount Vesuvius; whose ruins are now partly explored.

Pompeius, Cnæ'us, Mag'nus, the famous Roman general, and triumvir with Julius Cæsar and Crassus. He was born in the year 106, B. C., and rose to distinction under the command of Sulla, in his wars against Marius and his partisans, by whom he was surnamed "the Great." His first great military service was against the Mediterranean pirates, in the year 67, B. C., whom he speedily and entirely crushed. He next took part in the Mithridatic War, and not only completely conquered the king of Pontus, but subjugated Armenia and Syria, reducing the latter to a Roman province, and returned to Rome in 60, B. C., the most powerful of all her citizens. The triumvirate was then formed, which could be no more than an armed truce; and by affording time to Cæsar to gain renown, and to form and discipline an army, deprived Pompey of all the advantages he possessed. The civil war broke out in 49, B. C., and in the next year, at Pharsalia, Pompey and his party were crushed by Cæsar; and he himself, having fled to Egypt, was basely murdered there by the commands of the king, in September, 48, B. C. His victorious antagonist inflicted on his murderers condign punishment. The readers of Cicero's Letters may discover some of the weaknesses of this great general and statesman; and Cæsar's own "Commentaries" will supply what else is needful to understand the rapidity and completeness of the fall of one who once had seen all Rome at his feet.—The son of Pompey the triumvir, who was defeated by Cæsar at Munda, in Spain, and soon afterwards put to death, in 45, B. C.

Pompei'us, Sex'tus, Mag'nus, another son of Pompey the triumvir, who renewed the conflict in his father's cause, at sea, after the death of Cæsar, in 44, B. C., but was at last defeated by Augustus, and put to death in 35, B. C.

Pomptinæ Palu'des, the great Pomptine or Pontine Marsh, near the western coast of Italy, to the south of Rome.

Pon'tius, Cai'us, the Samnite general, who in the year 321, B. C., entrapped the Roman army at the Caudine Forks, and made it pass under the yoke.

Pon'tus, a country on the coast of the Euxine in Asia Minor, bounded by Paphlagonia, Galatia, Cappadocia, Armenia, and Colchis. From the 4th century to the 1st century, B. C., Pontus was an independent kingdom, of considerable wealth and power, especially during the reign of Mithridates the Great. It was conquered by Rome in the Mithridatic Wars, but was not made a Roman province till after the middle of the 1st century, A. D.

Pon'tus, or Pon'tus Euxi'nus, the ancient name of the Black Sea.

Por'cia, the daughter of Cato, and wife of Brutus, the Roman patriot. She killed herself when she learned that the cause in which her husband was embarked was irretrievably ruined, in 42, B. C.

Porphyri'us, a Greek philosopher of the 3rd century, A. D., usually known as a vehement opponent of Christianity.

Por'sena, Lars, the Etruscan king, who during the legendary period of Roman history is said to have attacked Rome, for the purpose of restoring the Tarquins. The real events of this war are completely buried beneath such self-glorifying legends as those of Clælia, Cocles, and Mutius Scævola. There is no doubt, however, that Porsena did conquer Rome; but it is also certain that he did not reinstate the kings.

Portum'nus, the Roman god of sea-ports.

Po'rus, or Shah-poor, the name of two Indian kings, conquered by Alexander the Great.

Posei'don, the Greek name of Neptune.

Posido'nus, a Greek philosopher of the former part of the 1st century, B. C., who taught with great success at Rome.

Postumus, a pretended Roman emperor, in Gaul, from 258 to 267, A. D.

Potidæ'a, a Greek town in Macedonia, taken by the Athenians from the Corinthians in 429, B. C.

Praxit'eles, a famous Greek sculptor of the 4th century, B. C.

Pri'amus, the son of Laomedon, and last king of Troy. Homer has introduced him frequently in the Iliad, and especially near the end of his poem, where he visits the tent of Achilles, to ransom the corpse of his son Hector. He was said to have had 50 sons; and he was killed during the sack of Troy by Neoptolemus, the son of Achilles.

Pri'apus, the son of Bacchus and Venus, and the god of gardens, orchards, &c.

Priscia'nus, a famous grammarian of Constantinople, who flourished in the 5th century, A. D.

Pro'bus, Mar'cus Aure'lius, Emperor of Rome from 276 to 282, A. D. He was a successful military commander, but fell during a mutiny of his soldiers.

Pro'clus, a famous Platonic philosopher of the 5th century, A. D.

Proc'ne, the wife of Tereus, who was changed into a swallow.

Procrus'tes, a robber of Attica, killed by Theseus. It was said that he used to lay all his captives upon his own bed, and to stretch those who were not so long as it, and to lop off the superfluous length of those who were longer.

Prod'icus, a Greek sophist of the beginning of the 4th century, B. C., to whom we are indebted for the fable of the Choice of Hercules.

Præ'tus, the son of Abas, and king of Argos, whose daughters were said by the legends to have been driven mad for comparing their beauty with that of Juno.

Prom'e'theus, the Titan, son of Iapetus, who made an image in the form of man, and animated it with fire, which he stole from heaven. He was the great friend and beneficent deity to mortals; and on that account was said to have been fixed to a rock in the Caucasus, and tormented by a vulture. The legends concerning him differ greatly. But it was generally believed that Hercules delivered him.

Proper'tius, Sex'tus Aure'lius, a Roman poet of the time of Augustus, patronized by Mæcenas.

Propon'tis, the ancient name of the Sea of Marmora.

Proser'pina, the daughter of Ceres, who was carried off by Pluto whilst gathering flowers in the field of Enna. When her mother had discovered her, it was betrayed by Ascalaphus that she had eaten the seed of a pomegranate in the infernal regions, and therefore could not be restored; but she afterwards spent part of her time in the under world, and part in the upper world.

Protagoras, a famous Greek sophist who flourished in the 5th century, B. C.

Protesila'us, the Greek who was the first killed of the host that went against Troy, being slain by Hector as soon as he leaped ashore.

Pro'teus, the sea-god, who was able to assume any form he pleased, and had the gift of prophecy.

Protog'enes, the celebrated Rhodian painter, who flourished in the 4th century, B. C.

Psammet'ichus, the Saïte king of Egypt from 671 to 617, B. C.

Psy'che, the bride of Cupid in the beautiful allegory of Apuleius, and the personification of the human soul.

Ptolemæ'us, the dynastic name of 13 kings of Egypt, who reigned from 323 to 43, B. C. The most famous were Ptolemæus Soter, who reigned from 323 to 285, B. C. He had been a general of Alexander the Great, and was appointed to the command in Egypt after his death; the sovereignty of which he assumed, and was able to maintain, and hand down to his son, Ptolemæus Philadelphus, who reigned from 285 to 247, B. C., a prince who still further consolidated the kingdom, not only by the successful conduct of its external relations, but also by the prudent management of its internal affairs. Ptolemæus Evergetes, from 247 to 222, B. C., aspired to extend his territories, but he lost again most of the provinces which he wrested from the kings of Syria. Ptolemæus Epiphanes, from 205 to 181, B. C., in whose reign the Romans first actively engaged in the affairs of Egypt. After his time the kingdom sank under the weakness and vices of its rulers, and was finally annexed to the Roman Empire. [Cleopatra, Julius Cæsar, &c.]

Ptolemæus, Claudius, the great Greek geographer and astronomer of the 2nd century, A. D.

Ptolemæis, the ancient name of Acre in Syria.

Publicola, Publius Valerius, a Roman political leader of the period of the expulsion of the kings, who was said to have aided greatly in establishing the sovereignty of the "populus" at Rome.

Publius Volo, the author of the Publilian Law at Rome; a law by which the power of the "plebs" was greatly increased.

Pudicitia, the Roman goddess of modesty.

Pupienus, Marcus Clodius, Maximus, joint Emperor of Rome with Balbinus in 238, A. D.

Puteoli, the city of Italy now called Pozzuoli, after which the Bay of Naples was named Sinus Puteolanus.

Pydna, a Macedonian city, near which the Romans overthrew Perseus in 168, B. C., and along with him the kingdom of Macedonia.

Pygmæi, a fabulous race of men, said to have lived in Æthiopia, or some other remote region, and to have carried on a perpetual warfare with the cranes.

Pygmalion, a sculptor of Cyprus, at whose prayer Venus gave life to a statue he had chiselled, and become enamoured of.

Pylades, the cousin and friend of Orestes, who was engaged with him in the murder of his mother, the recovery of his sister, &c.

Pylos, a town of Elis, of which Nestor was king.—A town of Messenia, now Navarino.

Pyramus, the lover of the beautiful girl Thisbe in the old story, who killed himself, fearing that she had perished.

Pyrenæi Montes, the mountain-range still called the Pyrenees.

Pyræa, the wife of Deucalion.

Pyræho, the founder of the sceptical school of Greek philosophers, who flourished in the 4th century, B. C.

Pyræhus, a name of Neoptolemus, the son of Achilles.—King of Epirus from 305 to 272, B. C. The early part of his reign was very troubled, and it was not until the year 295, B. C., that he obtained firm possession of his throne. The great event of his life, which was full of military undertakings, was the invasion of Italy in 280, B. C., to assist the Tarentines against Rome. At first he was victorious over the Romans, but his victories led to no result; and after he had wasted three years in Sicily, on his return to Italy he was completely defeated, and driven back to Greece. He ended his stormy life at Argos, being killed by a tile thrown from the top of a house by a woman.

Pythagoras, the great Greek mystical philosopher, who was born at Samos, and after much travel settled at Crotona in Italy, flourishing in the 6th century, B. C.

Python, the serpent said to have been bred from the slime left by the waters of the deluge of Deucalion; and slain by Apollo.

QUADI, a powerful people of Germany, who lived on the Danube, in the 2nd century, A. D.

Quintilianus, Marcus Fabius, a celebrated Roman rhetorician of the 1st century, A. D.

Quirinalis Mons, one of the 7 hills on which Rome was built.

Quirinus, the name by which Romulus was worshipped as a deity.

RABIRIUS, Caius, a Roman senator, whom Cicero defended in an appeal to the people, against a capital condemnation, in 63, B. C.

Ravenna, a city of Italy, which under the later Empire became one of the principal places in the country, and was the seat of government, after the Empire had been overthrown.

Reate, a town of Italy, now called Rieti.

Regillus Lacus, a lake in Italy, near which the Romans defeated the Latins, in 493, B. C., with the aid of Castor and Pollux, say the legends.

Regulus, Marcus Atilius, a celebrated Roman commander during the 1st Punic war, who being taken prisoner by the Carthaginians, and sent to Rome by them to persuade his countrymen to make peace, urged them to prosecute the war with greater vigour, and was killed by his captors with the utmost cruelty in 250, B. C.

Remus, the twin brother of Romulus.

Rhadamanthus, son of Jupiter and Europa, and made one of the judges in the infernal regions, according to the legends.

Rhætia, a country to the north-east of Italy, now the Tyrol; conquered by the Romans in the time of Augustus, and soon afterwards made a province.

Rheia, the Greek name of the goddess Cybele.

Rheia Sylvia, the mother of Romulus.

Rhegium, a city of Italy, on the straits now called after the town of Messina. It was founded by the Greeks in the 8th century, B. C.; and was a place of great importance until it was taken by Dionysius the Elder of Syracuse.

Rhenus, the river of Germany now called the Rhine.

Rhesus, a king of Thrace, whose horses were carried off and himself killed by Ulysses and Diomedes, in the night on which he came to assist Priam, before they could drink of the water of the Xanthus, as the oracle had declared that otherwise Troy could not be taken.

Rhipæi Montes, a mountain-range supposed to be the Ural Mountains.

Rhodaenus, the river of Europe now called the Rhone.

Rhodus, the island now called Rhodes, at the entrance to the great port of which was the great statue of Apollo, which, as the Colossus of Rhodes, was one of the wonders of the world.

Ricimer, the Suevian chief, who played so conspicuous a part in the last days of the Western Empire, and took the city of Rome in 472, A. D.

Roma, once the mistress of the civilized world, stands upon the river Tiber, in Italy. According to the universally received legend, it was founded by Romulus, in 753, B. C., and was governed during 244 years by seven kings in succession, under whom it increased so greatly, that its walls included the seven hills, famed in history, called the Capitoline, the Palatine (which was the site of the city of Romulus), the Quirinal, the Esquiline, the Cælian, the Viminal, and the Aventine hills. In after-times it extended across the river, and the Janiculan hill was encompassed by its walls, which were then almost 12 miles in circumference. From the year 509, B. C. to 31, B. C., it was a republic, governed by two annually elected consuls; and it gradually extended its sway over Italy, Spain, Greece, Gaul, Asia Minor, Syria, Egypt, and the northern coasts of Africa. Augustus changed its government into an autocracy, and was, in fact, the first Emperor. Great Britain was the principal addition made to the territorial extent of the Empire. When Constantine the Great founded Constantinople, Rome was shorn of its peculiar glory; but it was not utterly extinguished till the overthrow of the Western Division of the Empire by Odoacer, in 476, A. D. Once only (if we may trust its historians) during the republican government of the city, in 390, B. C., it fell into the hands of an enemy, being taken by Brennus and the Gauls. And not till 410, A. D. (800 years afterwards), was it again captured; the Goths under Alaric succeeding in a third attempt. Genseric, the king of the Vandals, took Rome in 455, A. D.; and Ricimer, the patrician, carried it by storm in 472, A. D. In its most prosperous period during the reign of Augustus, and for a short time afterwards, it has been computed that the population amounted to about 2,000,000. Amongst the most celebrated public buildings and structures which adorned Rome under the Empire, may be enumerated the Colosseum, the Pantheon, the several Baths of Diocletian, Titus, and Antonine, the temples on the Capitol, and near the Forum and the Sacred Way, the Theatres of Pompey and Marcellus, the Viminal and Flaminian Circuses, the Aqueducts, by which the city was supplied with water for culinary uses, and the triumphal arches of Titus and Constantine, and the columns of Trajan and Aurelius; to which should be added the commencements of those wonderful roads, known as the Appian, the Flaminian, &c., which were carried from the metropolis to the farthest boundaries of the Empire; and the huge sewers under the older portions of the city, which have been attributed to its earliest inhabitants.

Romulus, the legendary founder of Rome. According to the generally received story, he and his brother Remus were the twin children of Rhea Sylvia, by the god Mars; and they with their mother being thrown into the Tiber, the boys were rescued and nursed by a she wolf. When they determined to build the city, disputes arose respecting the right to name it, and Remus was killed. The new city was peopled by outlaws, who obtained wives by the "Rape of the Sabines." Romulus was a successful warrior; and finally was taken up to heaven and placed among the gods by the name of Quirinus.

Rosc'ius, a famous comedian of Rome, in the 1st century, B. C.

Roxa'na, one of the wives of Alexander the Great, who, with her son Alexander Ægus, was assassinated by Cassander in 311, B. C.

Rut'uli, one of the small Italian or Latin tribes which was conquered by Rome at the commencement of its history.

Rutup'iæ, the town in Kent, now called Richborough, where, as it is supposed, Julius Cæsar first landed in Britain.

SABÆ'I, the people of Saba, or Sheba, in Arabia Felix.

Sabi'na, Poppæ'a, the profligate wife of Otho, who became the mistress of the Emperor Nero, urged him to murder his mother and his wife, married him, and was killed by being kicked by him, in 65, A. D.

Sabi'ni, a powerful aboriginal tribe of Italy, who were not subdued by Rome till the year 290, B. C.

Sabi'nus, Fla'vius, the prefect of the city under Nero, Otho, and Vitellius, and brother to the Emperor Vespasian, who fell during the contest for the Empire between Vespasian and Vitellius, in 69, A. D.

Sabri'na, the Roman name of the river Severn.

Sa'cer, Mons, a small hill not far from Rome, to which on several occasions the plebeians withdrew by way of enforcing their political claims.

Saguntum, a city of Spain, the siege of which by Hannibal, in 219, B. C., provoked the 2nd Punic War.

Sal'amis, an island near the coast of Attica, which was through the most glorious period of Grecian history a dependency of Athens. Near it the Persian fleet was totally routed by the Greeks, in the year 480, B. C.

Salina'tor, Marcus Liv'ius, a Roman commander who defeated Hasdrubal in 207, B. C., at the Metaurus; and who, when censor in 204, B. C., laid a tax on salt, whence his surname was derived.

Sallust'ius, Cai'us Cris'pus, a celebrated Roman historian, who flourished in the 1st century, B. C. His narrations of the conspiracy of Catiline, and of the war with Jugurtha, are the earliest histories of Roman affairs which we possess.

Salmo'neus, the son of Æolus, who, daring to place himself on a level with Jupiter, and to imitate his thunder, was struck dead by him, according to the legend.

Sal'us, the Roman goddess of health, public prosperity, &c.

Sama'ria, the capital of the kingdom of Israel, called by the Romans Sebaste, in honour of the Emperor Augustus.

Sam'nium, the country of the Samnites, in Italy, who were not subdued by Rome until after a war of about 50 years, in the beginning of the 3rd century, B. C. They revolted during the wars between Sulla and Marius, in 82, B. C., and were completely defeated and crushed.

Sam'os, an island of the Ægean Sea, near the coast of Asia Minor, which was, in the 6th century, B. C., under the rule of the tyrant Polycrates, a place of great wealth and power. Its subsequent history was that of the most powerful state in those parts; and its renown was confined to skill in the arts.

Samos'ata, a city on the Euphrates, the capital of the kingdom of Commagene.

Samothra'ce, an island of the Ægean, where the Cabiric mysteries were celebrated.

San'cus, Se'mo, a Sabine deity worshipped at Rome.

Sangar'ius, a large river of Asia Minor, flowing into the Euxine.

Sap'pho, a celebrated Greek lyric poetess, who flourished about the beginning of the 6th century, B. C.

Sardanapa'lus, the last king of Assyria, whose name became a synonym for effeminate luxury. The legends say that when Arbaces revolted, he defended his city and palace against him for two years, and then burnt himself and his harem, and all his treasures together, in 876, B. C.

Sardin'ia, the island of the Mediterranean, still so called, which was taken by the Romans in 238, B. C., and remained in their possession till the 5th century, A. D.

Sar'dis, a great city of Asia Minor, on the river Paetolus, and anciently the capital of Lydia. It was the seat of one of the Christian Churches addressed in the Book of Revelation.

Sarmat'ia, the ancient name of the great eastern steppe of Europe, including Poland and part of Russia, and extending to the north of the Euxine as far as Scythia.

Sarpe'don, a prince of Lycia, and the son of Jupiter, who was one of the allies of Priam in the Trojan war, and slain by Patroclus.

Sassan'idæ, the dynasty which reigned in Persia from 226 to 651, A. D. The first king was Artaxerxes, who revolted against Artabanus of Parthia; and the last Yezdijerd the Third, who was defeated and killed by the Mohammedans. Sapor the Second, who reigned from 310 to 381, A. D., was the most distinguished king of this dynasty.

Saturni'nus, the name of two pretenders to the crown of Imperial Rome; both of whom were proclaimed by their soldiers, and speedily put to death by them.

Saturni'nus, Lu'cius Appulei'us, an unscrupulous and violent political leader of Rome, in the time of Marius, who was finally killed by the mob, which he had himself urged to bloodshed, at an election, in 100, B. C.

Satur'nus, the son of Cœlus and Terra, and father of the Olympian gods, Jupiter, Juno, Neptune, and Pluto; who attempted to devour all his male children, and was only prevented by the artifices of their nurses. He was eventually dethroned by Jupiter. The legends respecting him differ greatly from each other; and by some he is represented as merely a rustic deity of Italy.

Sat'yri, rustic divinities, of a semi-beastial form, and devoted to the worship of Bacchus, closely resembling the Fauns.

Sax'ones, a German tribe who lived contiguous to the Angli, if they were not the same under another name. They took part in the conquest and colonization of Britain, and were the progenitors of some people of modern central Germany.

Scæ'vola, Cai'us Mucius, a legendary hero of Rome, who was said to have attempted to assassinate Lars Porsena, and to have held his own hand in the fire till it was consumed, in order to show the king what he could endure, when he was brought before him.

Scal'dis, the Roman name of the river Scheldt.

Scaman'der, one of the rivers of Troy.

Scandina'via, the Roman name for the country about the Baltic Sea.

Scap'ula, Pub'lius Osto'rius, the Roman governor of Britain, who defeated and captured Caractacus, in 50, A. D.

Sci'pio, Pub'lius Cornelius Africa'nus, the great conqueror of Hannibal, and one of the most illustrious of Roman statesmen and commanders. After a distinguished course of subaltern services, he was sent into Spain, in 210, B. C., which in 3 campaigns he completely freed from the Carthaginian forces. But it was his plan of invading Africa, which compelled the recall of Hannibal from Italy, that decided the issue of the 2nd Punic war. At the battle of Zama, in 202, B. C., he totally routed the great conqueror. In after-years when he stood before the Roman people accused of receiving bribes from Antiochus of Syria, instead of pleading, he told them then that on that day he had defeated Hannibal, and called on them to follow him to the Capitol to thank the gods for that victory.—The adopted son of the conqueror of Hannibal, and a worthy successor to his great name, who, after a brilliant career in inferior commands, was appointed to conduct the war in Africa, and in 146, B. C., took Carthage itself, thus triumphantly concluding the 3rd Punic war, and putting an end to the most dangerous rival of Rome for ever. In 133, B. C., he added to his laurels the capture of Nimantia in Spain; and in the year after he was murdered during one of the fierce political contests at Rome.—This was one of the most distinguished surnames in Rome; and the lives of the various Scipios would contain the whole history of the best part of the republican period of the city.

Scop'as, a famous Greek sculptor, who flourished in the 4th century, B. C.

Sco'ti, a Celtic people who lived in Ireland and Scotland, and were the ancestors of the Erse of Ulster and the Highlanders.

Scribo'nia, one of the wives of Augustus Cæsar, who was divorced by him in 39, B. C., on the day on which their daughter Julia was born.

Scyl'ax, a Greek geographer and navigator of the end of the 6th century, B. C.

Scylla and Charyb'dis, 2 fabulous monsters said to have resided on the shores of the narrowest part of the straits of Mea-sina. Scylla was represented as surrounded by dogs, and was in fact a rock very dangerous to the navigation; Charybdis, who engulfed the sea with horrid din 3 times every day, was as dangerous an eddy or whirlpool. [Nisus.]

Scy'ros, one of the Sporades, where Lycomedes reigned, and Theseus was murdered, according to the legends.

Scyth'ia, the common name of Tartary and Siberia, with some part of Russia in Europe, as far as they were known to the ancients.

Seja'nus, Ælius, the infamous minister and favourite of Tiberius, who was suspected by his master of aiming at the throne, and after a career of astonishing crimes, was assassinated by order of the senate in 31, A. D.

Seleuci'a, a great city on the Tigris, built by Seleucus Nicator, which was the occasion of the actual desertion and downfall of Babylon.—Another great city, built by the same king, in Syria, not far from the mouth of the Orontes.—There were several other cities so called.

Seleuci'dæ, the Greek dynasty which ruled over Syria from 312 to 65, B. C.

Seleucus Nicator, one of the generals of Alexander the Great, who on his death received the government of Babylonia, and in 312, B. C., erected the kingdom of Syria. His reign was a continuous succession of wars and intrigues, but he maintained and consolidated the kingdom he had set up, and was at length assassinated by Ptolemy Ceraunus, in 280, B. C.

Seleucus Callinicus, king of Syria from 246 to 226, B. C. The principal events of his reign were wars with Egypt, and civil wars; one of which resulted in the loss of the whole of the eastern provinces of his empire, and the establishment of the kingdom of Parthia.

Seli'nus, a city on the south coast of Sicily, founded in the 7th century, B. C., by Greeks from Megara, and taken by Carthage in the beginning of the 4th century, B. C.

Sen'ele, the daughter of Cadmus, and mother of Bacchus by Jupiter. She was persuaded by Juno in disguise to beg Jupiter to come to her in all his Olympian splendours, and she was burnt up by the lightning.

Semi'ramis, the child of the Syrian goddess Derceto, who, according to the legends, having been exposed, was nursed by doves, and in time became the wife of Ninus, the founder of Nineveh, whom she ultimately succeeded on the throne. Other legends tell of her bravery and conquests, and of her monstrous voluptuousness, and her disappearing from the earth in the likeness of a dove.

Sen'eca, Mar'cus Annæus, a rhetorician of Rome, who flourished in the latter part of the 1st century, B. C.

Sen'eca, Lu'cius Annæus, a celebrated philosopher of Rome, who was the instructor of the Emperor Nero, and at last put to death by his order, in 65, A. D., under the pretence that he had been engaged in a conspiracy against him.

Sen'ones, the tribe of Gauls which under Brennus took Rome in the year 390, B. C.

Sequa'na, the Roman name of the river Seine.

Sequa'ni, a tribe of Belgian Gauls.

Sera'pis, an Egyptian divinity much worshipped at Rome.

Se'rica, the country of the Seres, now China.

Seri'phus, one of the Cyclades, to which the Romans used to banish political offenders.

Serto'rius, Quin'tus, a Roman commander, who during the civil war between Marius and Sulla, having espoused the cause of the former, put himself at the head of the Lusitanians, in Spain, and, by the aid of fugitives from the vengeance of Sulla, maintained himself for several years against all the forces that were sent against him. But he was at length, in 72, B. C., assassinated by some of his associates. His tame fawn has shared his renown.

Sesos'tris, one of the greatest kings of Egypt, whose native name was Ramses. He was a great conqueror, but his history is very legendary.

Ses'tus, a town on the European side of the Hellespont, opposite Abydos.

Severus, Mar'cus Aure'lius Al'exander, Emperor of Rome from 222 to 235, A. D.; one of the good Emperors; he succeeded Elagabalus, and reigned for 10 years in peace. The founder of the Empire of the Sassanidæ then made war on him, and was defeated; being recalled to check an invasion of the Germans, he was assassinated by some soldiers, to whom his excellence had made him odious.

Severus, Flav'ius Val'erius, Emperor of Rome in 306 and 307, A. D. He was defeated by Maxentius, and forced to kill himself.

Severus, Lib'ius, nominal Emperor of the West from 461 to 465, A. D. [Ricimer.]

Severus, Lu'cius Septim'ius, Emperor of Rome from 193 to 211, A. D. He was a distinguished military commander, and owed his elevation to the army under him, on the Danube, when Pertinax was slain. He wrested Rome from Didius Julianus; he conquered and slew Niger in the East; Albinus he defeated and killed in Gaul; and thus he established himself on the throne. In his wars against the Parthians he was uniformly successful; and after a longer reign than usually was the lot of those who wore the purple, he died at York, in Britain, where he had repelled the barbarous Caledonians, and repaired the great wall of Hadrian.

Sibyl'læ, the name of certain legendary prophetesses, whose number is quite uncertain, but of whom the most famous was the one at Cumæ in Italy, said to have written the Sibylline Books, which were preserved at Rome, and were regarded with the most extreme reverence in the earlier period of its history.

Sicil'ia, the large triangular island at the extremity of Italy, in the Mediterranean, which was colonized by the Greeks and Phœnicians in the earliest ages, and afterwards was a dependency of Carthage, until that power was subjugated by Rome. It was a great corn-growing country during the greater part of its connexion with the Empire of the world; and after the fall of the Empire of the West, it was recovered by Belisarius from the Goths; and at a later period passed into the hands of the Arabs of Cairwan.

Sicyonia, a small state of the Peloponnesus, on the Corinthian Gulf, and adjacent to Corinth. Its chief renown was legendary and artistic, and it is seldom named in Grecian history.

Si'don, one of the chief cities of Phœnicia, lying between Tyre and Berytus; prosperous and wealthy in early times, but scarcely heard of after the 4th century, B. C.

Sige'um, a town of Asia Minor, near the southern entrance of the Hellespont.

Silēnus, a companion of Bacchus, who is generally represented as intoxicated, and who was believed to have the gift of prophecy.

Sil'ius, Cai'us, Ital'icus, a Roman poet of the 1st century, A. D.

Silu'res, the tribe of Britons who inhabited South Wales.

Silva'nus, a Roman god of the woods and fields.

Sim'ois, one of the rivers of Troy.

Simon'ides, a Greek poet, who flourished in the 5th century, B. C.

Simplic'ius, a Platonic philosopher of the 6th century, A. D.

Sinai, the name of the chief mountain in the rugged tract between the arms of the Red Sea, on which the Law was given to Moses, and which is believed to be the present Mount Serbal.

Si'non, the Greek who, according to the legend, threw himself into the hands of the Trojans, and persuaded them to admit the wooden horse.

Sino'pe, a Greek city on the southern coast of the Euxine, formerly of great wealth and importance.

Sire'nes, legendary sea-goddesses, who lived in the islands called Sirenusæ, near the coast of Campania, and who enticed voyagers by their songs, and then destroyed them.

Sis'yphus, the son of Æolus and king of Corinth, who for his treachery and deceit was condemned for ever to roll a huge stone up a mountain in the infernal regions, down which it always rolled again as soon as he had reached the top.

Smer'dis, king of Persia in 521, B. C., who pretended to be the son of Cyrus who had been murdered by Cambyses. The imposture was speedily discovered, and he was killed.

Smyr'na, a city of Asia Minor, on the coast of the Ægean Sea, which was always famous as a place of trade between Europe and the East. It was the seat of one of the Churches of Asia, addressed in the Book of Revelation.

So'crates, the most famous philosopher of Athens and of the ancient world, who was born in 469, B. C. He was the son of a statuary, and pursued the same calling in the early part of his life; but when he entered upon the study of wisdom, he laid aside that occupation, and devoted himself to the instruction of all whom he could persuade to listen to him, wherever he met with them in the city. The method he pursued, of pursuing with questions those he conversed with, until he constrained them to confess their ignorance; the blamelessness of his life; his independence of all schools and parties; and the declaration of the oracle that he was the wisest of the Greeks, all conspired to make him an object of dislike, and even of hatred, to the more violent spirits of the times, and at length, in 399, B. C., he was charged with corrupting the youth of Athens, and attempting to change the gods of Athens, and condemned to die by drinking hemlock. His whole life, his demeanour during the trial, and his death, were singularly consistent, and though deficient in the practical force which is so highly valued in our own country, were so simple, honest, unselfish, and elevated, that we cannot but regard him as one of the noblest and best of men. He considered himself as under some special divine guidance, but we do not exactly know what he meant by his tutelary "dæmon." The wits and satirists of the day made him the object of their unsparing attacks, and confounded him with the sophists, whom it was a great aim of his life to expose. He committed nothing to writing, but we have in the works of Plato and Xenophon ample means of ascertaining the principles and method of his philosophy. The Athenians, having recovered from the madness during which they condemned him, raised a statue to him; but the stain remains, and is one of the blackest upon the name and renown of Athens.

Sogdia'na, the north-eastern province of the ancient Persian Empire.

Sol, the Roman name of the sun-god.

Sol'i, a city of Cilicia, rebuilt by Pompey, and called after him Pompeïopolis.

Soli'nus, Cai'us Ju'lius, a Roman geographer of the 3rd century, A. D.

Sol'on, the first great Athenian constitutional lawgiver, and one of the 7 wise men of Greece. He was invited to reform the laws which Draco had established, and he succeeded in restoring internal tranquillity and order. But during his travels, his Constitution was overturned by Pisistratus, who made himself tyrant of Athens. He flourished in the earlier part of the 6th century, B. C. His conversation with Cræsus, and its influence on that king's mind, is of rather doubtful authenticity.

Som'nus, the Roman god of sleep.

Soph'ocles, the famous Athenian tragic poet, who was born in 495, B. C.; he succeeded Æschylus in his improvement of the drama, and raised it to its highest pitch of excellence in Greece. We possess but seven of his plays, two of which belong to the trilogy of Ædipus. He died in the year 406, B. C.

Sophonis'ba, the daughter of Hasdrubal, and wife of Syphax of Numidia, who, being taken prisoner by Masinissa, was demanded of him by Scipio, and poisoned herself at the desire of Masinissa, who had designed to marry her.

So'phron, a writer of mimes, who flourished at Syracuse in the 5th century, B. C.

Sora'cte, a mountain of Italy which could be seen from Rome.

Sosig'enes, a philosopher who aided

NIL NON MORTALE TENEMUS.—WE POSSESS NOTHING BUT WHAT IS MORTAL.

NITIDÆ VESTES ORNATIOREM REDDUNT.—FINE FEATHERS MAKE FINE BIRDS.

Julius Cæsar in reforming the Calendar, in the year 46, B. C.

Sos'pita, a surname of Juno.

Sos'tratus, a famous architect, who flourished in Greece in the 4th century, B. C.

Sparta. [Lacedæmon.]

Spartacus, a Roman gladiator, who in the years 73 to 71, B. C., raised and maintained a revolt against Rome, in Italy. But, after many victories, he was at length defeated and slain.

Spartianus, Ælius, a Roman historian, who flourished about the end of the 3rd century, A. D.

Spercheus, a river of Thessaly.

Spes, the Roman goddess of Hope.

Speusippus, a philosopher who flourished in the 4th century, B. C.

Sphinx, a fabulous female monster, who ravaged Thebes, until an answer should be found to her riddle; which when Œdipus answered, she killed herself.

Sporades, a scattered group of islands in the Ægean Sea.

Stabiae, a town of Campania, destroyed in 79, A. D., by the eruption of Mount Vesuvius.

Statira, the wife of Darius, who was taken prisoner by Alexander. [Barsine.]

Statius, Publius Papinius, a Roman poet, who flourished in the 1st century, A. D.

Stator, a name of Jupiter.

Stentor, the legendary Grecian herald, whose voice was as loud as the voices of 50 men combined.

Stephanus, a Byzantine writer, who flourished in about the 5th century, A. D.

Stesichorus, a Greek poet, who flourished in the beginning of the 6th century, B. C.

Stilicho, a famous Roman general near the end of the Empire of the West, who was put to death in 408, A. D.

Stilpo, a philosopher of Megara, who flourished about the end of the 4th century, B. C.

Strabo, an ancient geographer, who flourished about the period of the Christian æra.

Straton, a celebrated philosopher, who flourished at the close of the 3rd century, B. C.

Stratonice, the daughter of Demetrius Poliorcetes, married to Seleucus Nicator, who gave her up to his son Antiochus Soter.

Strophades, the name of two islands in the Ionian Sea, haunted by the Harpies.

Strymon, a river which anciently divided Thrace from Macedonia.

Stymphalis, a lake of Arcadia, haunted, according to the legend, by ravenous birds, which were killed by Hercules.

Styx, one of the rivers of the infernal regions, which flowed round them seven times; an oath by which was said to be absolutely inviolable. Some of the legends personified it, and made it the mother of Victory, Strength, and Valour.

Sua'da, the Roman goddess of persuasion.

Suetonius, Caius, Tranquillus, a Roman biographer or historian, who flourished at the close of the 1st century, A. D.

Suevi, a powerful German race, who inhabited the country now called Suabia.

Sulla, Lucius Cornelius Felix, one of the great commanders and political leaders of Rome, who having served under Marius, afterwards became his deadly opponent. The civil wars between these rivals were the miserable precursors of the downfall of the Roman republic, and inflicted numberless evils on the state. In the end, in 82, B. C., Sulla triumphed over Marius, and, having caused himself to be appointed Dictator, he secured his victory by the most frightful slaughter of all who had been on the opposite side. He also took a distinguished part in the Mithridatic and the Social Wars; and he was a patron and cultivator of literature and art. He died in 78, B. C.

Sulpicius, Publius, Rufus, a Roman orator of the age preceding Cicero, put to death by Sulla, as a partisan of Marius.

Sulpicius, Servius, Rufus, a Roman orator of the time of Cicero, and a partisan of Julius Cæsar.

Summanus, a Roman deity, resembling Jupiter in his power and attributes.

Sunium, a promontory of Attica.

Susa, the capital of the ancient Persian Empire.

Sybaris, an ancient Greek city of Italy, famous for the luxurious habits of its inhabitants.

Symmachus, Quintus Aurelius, a famous writer and orator, who flourished in the 4th century, A. D.

Syphax, the king of western Numidia, who having made war upon Masinissa, was defeated and taken prisoner by him, and given up to Rome, in the year 203, B. C.

Syracusa, one of the most important cities of Sicily, standing on a bay in its eastern coast. It was a Greek colony, but afterwards was the capital of a monarchy, which at one time held in subjection the whole island, and part of Italy adjoining. The rulers were of the class called tyrants, persons like Gelon, Hieron, Dionysius the Elder and the Younger, Agathocles, &c., who made themselves masters of the state in violation of the constitution. The great events in its history, apart from what has been related elsewhere, are the unsuccessful siege by the Athenians under Nicias, from 415 to 413, B. C., and the long siege and capture of the city by Marcellus in 212, B. C.

Syria, the country of Asia lying between the eastern end of the Mediterranean Sea and the river Tigris. It formed part of all the great Asiatic Empires except the Parthian; and it was sometimes subject to Egypt. Palestine and Phœnicia were the most important parts of it, with regard to the general history of the world; but as the metropolitan province of the Empire of the Seleucids, its special history is more splendid. It ultimately fell under the power of Rome, and was made a province of the Empire in the year 64, B. C.

Syrinx, a nymph beloved by Pan, and, according to the legends, turned into reeds, when flying from him. The god is said to have constructed his pipe from those reeds.

SUPERANDA OMNIS FORTUNA FERENDO.—ENDURANCE WILL CONQUER ANY FATE.

SPES SOLA HOMINEM IN MISERIIS SOLATUR.—HOPE IS OUR ONLY COMFORT IN MISERY.

Syr'tis Major, and Syr'tis Mi'nor, two gulfs on the coast of Africa, to the south of Carthage, exceedingly dangerous on account of their rocks and sand-banks.

Syrus, Publius, a Roman writer of mimes, who flourished in the 1st century, B. C.

TACITUS, Cai'us Cornelius, the celebrated Roman historian, who flourished near the end of the 1st century, A. D. His Histories are of the greatest value; and his account of the Germans, and his Life of Agricola (who was his father-in-law), have always been most highly prized and admired.

Tac'itus, Mar'cus Clau'dius, Emperor of Rome during 275 and 276, A. D. He was one of the good Emperors, but his reign was too brief to be of service to the state.

Tæ'narum, the south eastern promontory of the Peloponnesus, near which was said to be one of the entrances to the lower world.

Ta'ges, a grandson of Jupiter, who taught the art of divination in Etruria.

Ta'gus, the river of Spain still so called.

Tam'esis, the Roman name of the river Thames.

Tana'gra, a town of Bœotia, near which the Athenians were defeated in 457, B. C.

Tan'ais, the river now called the Don.

Tan'talus, the son of Jupiter, and king of Lydia, who (according to some legends) was punished for betraying the secrets of his father by being placed in a lake, in the infernal regions, whose waters fled from him when he sought to quench his thirst, and amidst trees laden with fruit, whose boughs avoided every effort he made to seize them. Other legends made him the father of Pelops.

Taproba'ne, the Greek name of Ceylon.

Taren'tum, a city of southern Italy, seated on a bay called after its name. It was founded by the Greeks, in the 8th century, B. C., and when it was threatened by the growing power of Rome, Pyr'rus of Epirus undertook its defence, but in 272, B. C., it was taken, and although it endeavoured to recover its freedom by the help of Hannibal, it was finally subjugated by the Romans.

Tarpei'a, one of the vestal virgins of Rome, who, according to the legend, agreed to betray the Capitol to the Sabines, for the ornaments they wore on their arms. But they threw their shields on her, and she was thus killed. Part of the Capitoline Hill was called after her name.

Tarquin'ii, an Etrurian city, from which the Tarquins of Rome derived their name.

Tarquin'ius, Lu'cius Pri'scus, the 5th king of Rome, according to the legends. He was an Etruscan by birth, and his wife Tanaquil was a skilful diviner. Migrating to Rome, amidst all happy auguries, he was at last raised to the throne, on the death of Ancus Martius. The stories attributed to him both military success, and the beautifying and improving of the city by public works; and relate that he was finally murdered by the sons of his predecessor.

Tarquin'ius, Lu'cius, Superbus, the 7th and last king of Rome, according to the legends, was grandson to the former Tarquin. He had married one daughter of Servius Tullius, but her sister, whose ambition resembled his own, by a series of horrid crimes, secured him as her husband, and urged him to the murder of her father to secure the throne. He reigned as a tyrant; but in the end it was the rape of Lucretia, by his son Sextus, which overthrew at once both him and the kingly rule in Rome. The date of the Regifuge, or Expulsion of the Tarquins, was said to be 510, B. C.

Tar'sus, an important city of Cilicia, most celebrated now as the birth-place of the Apostle Paul.

Tar'tarus, the abode of the wicked in the lower world.

Tartes'sus, the Roman name of Tarshish, a Phœnician colony in Spain.

Thers'ites, a deformed Greek, who was deservedly chastised by Ulysses (according to the Iliad) for his impudent railing. Other legends say that Achilles killed him with a blow of his fist.

The'seus, the renowned hero of Athenian legend, the son of Ægeus, and friend of Hercules. He slew the Minotaur, and carried off Ariadne, but deserted her at Naxos. His wars with the Amazons were widely celebrated. His friend Pirithous helped him to carry off Helen, whom her brothers Castor and Pollux recovered. He was connected with every general enterprise of the heroic age, and was at last killed by Lycomedes of Scyros.

Thes'piæ, a town of Bœotia on Mount Helicon.

Thes'pis, the inventor of the Greek tragedy, who lived in the 6th century, B. C., at Athens.

Thessal'ia, a country of northern Greece, lying on the Ægean Sea, and bounded by Macedonia, Epirus, Ætolia, Phocis, and Locris. It never played a conspicuous part in Grecian history; but Jason, the tyrant of Phææ, and "Tagus" of the country, in the times preceding those of Philip of Macedonia, raised himself to a position of great influence; and after his death the country was subjugated by Philip.

UNA HIRUNDO NON FACIT VER.—ONE SWALLOW DOES NOT MAKE SPRING.

QUI FUGIT MOLAM, FUGIT FARINAM.—WHO WILL NOT GRIND, NO GRIST SHALL FIND.

Thessaloni'ca, a city of Macedonia, in the earliest times called Therma, wherein the Apostle Paul founded a church.

Thetis, one of the most celebrated of the Nereids, married to Peleus, by whom she was the mother of Achilles.

This'be, a beautiful girl of Babylon, whom Pyramus loved; and who killed herself, on finding his dead body at the place where she had appointed to meet him.

Tho'as, the son of Bacchus and Ariadne, and king of Lemnos, whose life was (according to the legend) preserved by his daughter when the women of Lemnos murdered all the men.

Thrac'ia, the country lying between the Ægean Sea and the Danube, and extending from the Euxine to Illyria. It was inhabited by various barbarous tribes; but in the 5th century most of them were subject to the king of Odrysæ; and in the following century Philip of Macedonia conquered the whole country.

Thras'ea, Publius, Pæ'tus, a Roman nobleman and philosopher of the reign of Nero, and put to death by his order, for his virtue, and independence of character.

Thrasyl'bus, the Athenian who, in the year 403, B. C., overthrew the constitution established at Athens by the Spartans, and restored the former polity. He was killed by the people of Aspendus, when he was in command of the Athenian fleet there.

Thucydides, one of the most celebrated Greek historians, born at Athens in the year 471, B. C. He took part in the events of his times, but was self-banished for 20 years (fearing the punishment for want of success in a military command intrusted to him), and did not return till Thrasyl'bus restored the old Athenian constitution, and soon afterwards died. His history of the former part of the Peloponnesian war is one of the most precious bequests of ancient Greece to modern times.

Thule, the most remote island in the North Sea known to the ancients; but which it was is uncertain.

Thurii, a Greek city of southern Italy, built in the 5th century, B. C., nearly on the site of Sybaris, and subsequently a place of great importance.

Thyestes, the son of Pelops, and brother of Atreus, whose wife he corrupted, and who in revenge killed his two sons, and offered their flesh, in a feast, to their father.

Tiberias, a city of Galilee, built by Herod, and named after the Emperor Tiberius. It stood on the lake called after its name, or the sea of Gennesaret.

Tiberis, the river on which Rome stood.

Tiberius Claudius Dru'sus Ne'ro Ca'sar, the second Emperor of Rome, from 14 to 37, A. D. He was the son-in-law of Augustus, and was adopted by him, and appointed his successor. In his earlier life he distinguished himself in various military commands; but on attaining the Empire, he carefully extinguished the few remains of political liberty, and gave himself up to unrestrained and brutal sensuality. From the island of Capreæ, by his minister Sejanus, or the slavish senate, he carried on the government, and proscribed and assassinated all whom he feared.

Tibull'us, Al'bius, a Roman poet, who flourished in the reign of Augustus.

Tit'anes, the name of the earlier family of gods, the children of Cælus and Terra, who were dispossessed by Jupiter and the Olympian deities, and hurled into the under world.

Titho'nus, the brother of Priam, beloved by Aurora, who made him immortal, but could not preserve his youth, and turned him into a grasshopper.

Titus Fla'vius Sabi'nus Vespasia'nus, the Emperor of Rome, after his father Vespasian, from 79 to 81, A. D. Before he obtained the purple he had distinguished himself by bringing the Jewish war to a close,

MENS HOMINIS ALITUR DISCENDO.—THE MIND OF MAN IS NOURISHED BY LEARNING.

OBTECTATIO PLEROSQUE LACERAT.—FEW PEOPLE ARE OUT OF THE REACH OF SLANDER.

and taking and destroying Jerusalem, in the year 70, B. C. He was one of the best of the Roman Emperors.

Tit'yus, a giant, son of Jupiter, who, for some crime, was (as some legends say) hurled into the infernal regions, where his body covered 9 acres of land. A vulture also was always devouring his liver.

Tolo'sa, the city now called Toulouse.

Tom'yris, a Scythian queen, against whom Cyrus made war, and by whom he was killed.

Torqua'tus, Ti'tus Man'lius Imperio'sus, a famous Roman commander, who in 361, B. C., in single combat slew a Gaul of gigantic stature, and took away his golden "torque," whence he derived his name. He afterwards showed himself a "Roman father," by putting his own son to death for having, in disobedience to his orders, engaged in single combat with a champion of the Latins, whom he slew.

Traja'nus, Mar'cus Ul'pius, Emperor of Rome from 98 to 117, A. D. He was a military commander of the Roman stamp, and his campaigns were victories. He carried the terror of his arms to regions more remote from Rome than had ever before been reached by her armies, and Dacia and Parthia were the trophies of his courage and conduct. The column which he reared in the forum he constructed at Rome, still records his fame.

Trap'ezus, a city of Armenia, on the shore of the Euxine, now called Trebizond.

Tre'viri, a tribe of Belgian Gauls, whose capital city still bears the name of Treves.

Trinoban'tes, a tribe of Britons, whose chief city was London.

Triptol'emus, the son of a king of Eleusis, who was taught the art of husbandry by Ceres, and invented the plough, and showed men how to cultivate the earth.

Tri'ton, the son of Neptune and Amphitrite, or one of the attendants and trumpeters of Neptune.

Tro'as, the country at the north-west corner of Asia Minor, the capital of which was Troy.

Tro'ilus, a younger son of Priam, slain by Achilles.

Tro'ja, or I'lum, the capital of Troas, a city whose fame belongs entirely to the heroic age, and the siege of which by the Greeks, for the recovery of Helen, which lasted for 10 years, is the subject of Homer's grand epic, and the most renowned legend of all antiquity.

Tropho'nus, a legendary architect of ancient Greece, who was said to have an oracle in a cave in Bœotia.

Tros, the eponymous king of Troy, and the father of Ganymede.

Tul'lius, Ser'vius, the 6th legendary king of Rome, the son of a slave in the house of Tarquinius Priscus, and made king on his death by the arts of his queen Tanaquil. The old stories ascribed to him reforms so important, as to be equivalent to a new constitution, the formation of a general Latin confederacy, and the extension of the boundaries of the city so as to include all the 7 hills within its walls. When the younger Tarquin, his son-in-law, seized on the throne, Servius was put to death, his own daughter Tullia abetting the murder.

Tul'lus Hostil'ius, the 3rd legendary king of Rome, who was as warlike as his predecessor Numa was peaceful. He conquered the Albans, and destroyed their city. The famous combat of the Horatii and Curiatii took place during one of his wars. And at last he was killed by lightning.

Tur'nus, the king of the Rutulians, spoken of in the Æneid.

Tus'culum, a Latin town, near which Cicero had a country-house.

Ty'che, the Greek goddess of Fortune.

Ty'deus, the son of Ceneus and father of Diomedes. He was king of Calydon, and whilst a refugee in the court of Adrastus, he engaged in the expedition of Polynices against Thebes, where he perished, according to the old stories, through the spite of Amphiaraus.

Tyn'dareus, the husband of Leda, and father of Clytemnestra, who was king of Sparta before Menelaus, according to the legends.

Ty'phon, a fabulous 100-headed monster, produced by Juno from the earth, and father of destructive winds and hurricanes, at last buried by Jupiter under Mount Ætna. He is also called Typhæus, and other accounts are given of him.

Tyran'nion, a Greek teacher at Rome, who flourished in the 1st century, B. C.

Tyrrh'eni, a name of the people of Etruria.

Tyrtæ'us, a poet sent as a leader to the Spartans in the Messenian war by the Athenians, in compliance with the oracle. His martial odes were so inspiring, that he secured them the victory.

Ty'rus, the greatest commercial city of antiquity, in Phœnicia, near Sidon. The earliest notices of it occur in the Old Testament; and in those times it was besieged by the greatest powers in the world, for many years at a time, before it fell. A new city was built on an island near the shore, which was taken and destroyed by Alexander the Great, after a siege of more than half a year, and it never recovered its former importance.

U'BII, a German tribe, which lived on the Rhine.

Ulpia'nus, Domit'ius, a celebrated Roman lawyer, of the 3rd century, A. D.

Ulys'ses, the great Greek hero, son of Laertes, and king of Ithaca. He was, according to the Iliad and Odyssey (the latter of which is the story of his wanderings in returning from Troy), the most astute of all the Greeks, and his achievements at Troy most materially assisted the success of the expedition. His adventures during his 10 years' wanderings were numberless, but he at length reached his home, and delivered his wife Penelope from the importunities of her suitors. [Circe, Cyclops, Sirenes, Telemachus, &c.]

Um'bria, a country of Italy, on the Adriatic, conquered by Rome in the beginning of the 3rd century, B. C.

Ve'nus, the goddess of love and beauty, sprang (it was said) from the foam of the sea, or (as other legends said) the daughter of Jupiter and Dione. She was married to Vulcan, but is represented as indulging in amours with Mars, Jupiter, Neptune, Mercury, Bacchus, and with Anchises and Adonis. She was worshipped with especial honour at Paphos in Cyprus, and in Cythera. Paris awarded to her the golden apple, and received Helen in return; and the evils she worked amongst mortals are the theme of many legends. She bore as many names as there are aspects of love, and finally, these were regarded as the names of different deities. Sparrows and doves were customarily yoked to her chariot; her girdle inspired all hearts with passion for the wearer; and her son, Cupid, was her attendant and minister. The myrtle was sacred to her.

Ver'o'na, the city of Italy still so named.

Ver'res, Cai'us, an extortionate Roman governor of Sicily, who was accused by Cicero in some orations which still remain, and who was put to death by Antony.

Vertum'nus, the god of fruit, and lover of Pomona.

Verula'mium, the Roman name of St Albans.

Ve'rus, Lu'cius Aure'lius, Emperor of Rome, along with Marcus Aure'lius, from 161 to 169, A. D.

Vespasia'nus, Ti'tus Fla'vius Sabi'nus, Emperor of Rome from 70 to 79, A. D. He distinguished himself in many military commands before he became Emperor, and in Britain subdued the inhabitants of the Isle of Wight. He was engaged in the war with the Jews, when he was raised to the throne; and his government was highly beneficial to the state.

Ves'ta, the goddess of Home, or the Hearth, worshipped at Rome with peculiar honours, whose fire was not suffered to go out, and whose priestesses were vowed to inviolable chastity.

Vindobo'na, the Roman name of Vienna.

Virgil'ius, Pub'lius, Ma'ro, the great Roman epic poet, was born in 70, B. C., and when he went to beg for the restoration of his farm, which had been allotted to some of the triumvirs' soldiers, he not only received his land again, but obtained the patronage of Mæcenas and of the Emperor, which he enjoyed till his death, in 19, B. C. His principal work is the Æneid, which he wrote at the desire of Augustus, but did not live to revise. The Georgics were written for Mæcenas; and the Bucolics or Eclogues. None of his poems are characterised by much force; but they abound with passages of great tenderness, descriptive skill, and beauty; and have always been ranked amongst the first Latin classics.

Virgin'ia, the daughter of Lucius Virginius, whom (according to the story) Appius Claudius, the wicked decemvir, endeavoured to carry off from her parents. Her father, finding he could not save her by any other means, slew her in the open forum, and raised an insurrection, which overthrew the decemvirate, and restored the old magistracy. This happened, it is said, in 449, B. C.

Viria'thus, the leader of the Lusitanians in their revolt, in 150, B. C., who, after inflicting several defeats on the Romans, was murdered in 140, B. C.

OF THE CORONETS,

BY WHICH PRINCES OF THE BLOOD ROYAL, AND THE DIFFERENT RANKS OF THE NOBILITY, ARE DISTINGUISHED.

The Prince of Wales, as eldest Son of the King of Great Britain, is distinguished by a plume of three ostrich feathers, enclosed within a coronet of the ancient princes of Wales. Under it, in a scroll, is the motto "Ich dien," I serve.

The coronet of all the Princes, immediate sons or brothers of the Kings of Great Britain, is a circle of gold, bordered with ermine, surmounted with four fleurs-de-lis, and as many crosses-pattée alternately.

The coronet of the Princesses of Great Britain is a circle of gold, bordered with ermine, and composed of crosses-pattée, fleurs-de-lis, and strawberry leaves. It is surmounted by a cap of crimson velvet, with a tuft and tassel of gold.

A Duke's coronet is a circle of embossed gold, bordered with ermine, and set round with eight large strawberry leaves. It is surmounted by a cap of crimson velvet, with a tuft and tassel of gold.

A Marquess's coronet is a circle of embossed gold, bordered with ermine, set round with four strawberry leaves, and as many pearls on low pyramidical points, of equal height, placed alternately, with a cap and tassel as before.

An Earl's coronet is a circle of embossed gold, bordered with ermine, with eight high pyramidical points, on the tops of which are as many large pearls, placed alternately, with eight strawberry leaves on lower points; cap and tassel as before.

A Viscount's coronet is a circle of plain gold, bordered with ermine, with sixteen large pearls set close together on the rim; cap and tassel.

A Baron's coronet is a circle of plain gold, bordered with ermine, and six pearls, set at equal distances, with the crimson velvet cap and gold tassel, as before.

The eldest Sons of Peers, above the degree of a baron, bear their father's arms and supporters differenced with a label; and use the coronet appertaining to their father's second title. All the younger Sons bear their father's arms with proper differences, but without coronets.

The Archbishops and Bishops of England and Ireland surmount their armorial ensigns with a mitre, which is a round cap of gold pointed and cleft at the top, from which hang two blue pendants fringed with gold; with this difference, that the bishop's mitre is surrounded only with an embossed fillet of gold; whereas the archbishop's issues out of a ducal coronet.

PRIVILEGES, &c., OF THE PEERS.

The degrees of nobility in the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland are five, viz. Dukes, Marquesses, Earls, Viscounts, and Barons: to which may properly be added a sixth, viz. the Archbishops and Bishops, who, as spiritual lords, are entitled to a seat in the House of Peers, and possess for their lives all the faculties and privileges of the peerage. The principal of these privileges are as follow:—

1. That they are free from all arrest for debts, as being the king's hereditary counsellors. Therefore a peer cannot be outlawed in any civil action, and no attachment lies against his person. For the same reason they are exempt from attending courts leet, or sheriff's turns; or, in cases of riot, attending the posse comitatus.

2. In criminal causes they are only tried by their peers, who give their verdict not upon oath as other juries, but upon their honour: and then a court is fitted up for the purpose in the middle of Westminster Hall, at the king's charge.

3. To secure the honour of, and prevent the spreading of any scandal upon, peers, or any great officers of the realm, by reports, there is an express law, called scandalum magnatum, by which any man convicted of making a scandalous report against a peer of the realm (though true), is condemned to an arbitrary fine, and to remain in custody till the same be paid.

4. Upon any great trial in a court of justice, a peer may come into the court, and sit there uncovered. But no peer can be covered in the royal presence without permission for that purpose, except Lord Kingsale, who enjoys that privilege by hereditary right, originally granted to his ancestor, Baron de Courcy, by King John.

FORMS OF EPISTOLARY ADDRESS.

TO THE ROYAL FAMILY.

THE QUEEN.

Superscription.—To the Queen's Most Excellent Majesty.

Commencement.—Madam; Most Gracious Sovereign; May it please your Majesty.

Conclusion.—I remain, with the profoundest veneration, Madam, your Majesty's most faithful Subject and dutiful Servant.

PRINCES OF THE BLOOD ROYAL.

The Princes and Princesses of the Blood Royal are the King's Sons and Daughters, Brothers and Sisters, Uncles and Aunts:—Princes of the Blood, merely, are his Nephews and Cousins, who are styled Highness only; unless, as in the case of the late Duke of Gloucester, permitted by his Majesty to bear the title of Royal.

DUKE, PRINCESS.

Comm.—Sir [Madam].

Con.—I remain, with the greatest respect, Sir [I have the honour to be, Madam], Your Royal Highness's most dutiful and most obedient [most obedient and devoted] Servant.

Sup.—To her Royal Highness the Duchess of Cambridge [as wife of a Prince of the Blood Royal].

Comm.—Madam.

Con.—I have the honour to be, Madam, Your Royal Highness's most obedient and very humble Servant.

Wives of Princes of the Blood Royal are addressed in the same form.

DUKE, DUCHESS.

Comm.—My Lord Duke [Madam].

Con.—I have the honour to be, My Lord Duke [Madam], Your Grace's most devoted and obedient [most obedient and most humble] Servant.

The eldest Sons of Dukes are, by the courtesy of England, styled Marquesses, though usually distinguished by their Father's second title, whether it be that of Marquess or Earl.

The formal style of Duke is Most Noble.

MARQUESS, MARCHIONESS.

Sup.—To the Most Honourable the Marquess [Marchioness] of Lansdowne.

Comm.—My Lord Marquess [Madam].

Con.—I have the honour to be, My Lord Marquess, Your Lordship's [Madam, Your Ladyship's] most obedient and most humble Servant.

The eldest Sons of Marquesses are styled Earls.

When a Title is taken from the name of a Place, as Harewood, &c., we say, "The Marquess of Winchester, The Earl of Harewood;" when from a Family name, as Townsend, Stanhope, &c., "The Marquess Townsend, The Earl Stanhope."

In addressing all below the rank of Duchess, who have the title of Lady, tradesmen should use the words My Lady, instead of Madam; and servants and other persons in inferior stations, May it please your Ladyship.

EARL, COUNTESS; VISCOUNT, VIS-COUNTESS; BARON, BARONESS.

Comm.—My Lord [Madam].

Con.—I have the honour to be, My Lord, Your Lordship's [Madam, Your Ladyship's] most obedient and very humble Servant.

The eldest Sons of Earls are styled Viscounts.

All the Sons of Dukes and Marquesses, and the eldest Sons of Earls, have the title of Lord and Right Honourable; and their wives are addressed accordingly.

The Daughters of Dukes, Marquesses, and Earls, are styled Ladies, and addressed Right Honourable Lady, with the addition of the Christian name; and should they marry a person of inferior rank (not being a peer of the realm), they still retain their title and precedence, changing only their surname; if a peer of the realm, their title and precedence are merged in his, notwithstanding they may have been superior before marriage.

The younger Sons also of Dukes and Marquesses are styled Lords, and addressed Right Honourable Lord, with the Christian name added. Their wives have the title of Lady; and, unless superior to the husband in rank, take his Christian name instead of their own.

The younger Sons of Earls, and all the Sons of Viscounts and Barons, are styled Esquire and Honourable; and the Daughters Honourable. The Sons' Wives take the title of Honourable.

When the Daughter of a Viscount, or a Baron, marries, she takes the name of her husband, reserving the title of Honourable; thus, if she marry a Baronet or a Knight, she must be addressed The Honourable Lady; if a Commoner, The Honourable Mrs.

BARONET AND HIS WIFE.

Comm.—Sir [Madam].

Con.—I have the honour to be, Sir, Your most humble and obedient [Madam, Your Ladyship's most obedient and very humble] Servant.

KNIGHT AND HIS WIFE.

Sup.—To Sir Peter Laurie [Lady Laurie].
Comm. and Con. as last above.

The title of Knight is added only in formal documents; and in addressing a Baronet or a Knight familiarly, we must add the Christian name to Dear Sir, thus, "Dear Sir John, Dear Sir James."

The Widow of any person of rank, down to Knight, inclusive, marrying an untitled person, retains the title and name of her former husband: but marrying a person of rank higher than, or equal to, that of her former husband, she assumes his title and name.

ESQUIRE.

This title is now given to every man of respectability; but persons entitled to superior consideration are distinguished by "&c. &c. &c." added to the superscription; and it is deemed more respectful to write the word Esquire at full length.

The Wives of Gentlemen, where several of the same family are married, are distinguished by the Christian name of their husbands.

Privy Counsellors have the title of Right Honourable, which is prefixed to their name, thus,

To the Right Honourable Sir Archibald Macdonald, Bart.

Comm.—Sir.

Con.—I have the honour to be, Sir, Your most obedient very humble Servant.

Sup.—To the Reverend Sir Henry Bate Dudley, Bart.

No clerical dignity confers title or rank on the wife of the dignitary; who, unless she has a title in her own right, or through her husband independently of his clerical rank, is addressed, simply, Mistress.

LORD CHANCELLOR.

ROLLS.

CHIEF JUSTICE.

The Chief Justice of the Court of Common Pleas, and the Chief Baron of the Exchequer, are addressed in the same form; and they are all styled My Lord, both on the Bench and off.

PUISNE JUDGES.

The Puisne Judges and the Barons of the Exchequer (who on the Bench are styled My Lord) are Knights; and, in private intercourse, addressed as such; but the title of Judge being superior to Knight, it is usual to address thus:

Sup.—To the Honourable Mr Baron Alderson.

QUEEN'S SERJEANTS.

SERJEANT.

NAVAL OFFICERS.

Admirals have the rank of their flag added to their own name and title, thus:

Sup.—To the Right Honourable Lord Viscount Exmouth, Admiral of the Blue.

If untitled, they are styled simply Sir; or if familiarly, Dear Admiral.

Commodores are addressed in the same way as Admirals; but Commodore is only a local rank, and ceases with the command that conferred it.

Captains are addressed, either, "To Capt. John Thornton, R. N.;" or, if on service, "To John Thornton, Esquire, Commander of H. M. S. Invincible."

LIEUTENANTS.

"To Charles Gould, Esquire, R. N.;" or, if on service, "To Charles Gould, Esquire, Lieutenant of H. M. S. Dreadnought."

MILITARY OFFICERS.

All officers in the Army, above Lieutenants, Cornets, and Ensigns, have their military rank prefixed to their name and title.

Sup.—To Lieutenant General Sir Thomas Blomefield, Bart.

Subalterns are addressed Mr, or Esquire, with the name of the Regiment to which they, if on service, belong.

The familiar address of officers above the rank of captain, is Dear Colonel, Dear Major, &c.

LORD MAYOR.

Sup.—To the Right Honourable The Lord Mayor [The Lady Mayoress] of London [York, Dublin]. The Lord Provost [The Lady Provost] of Edinburgh.

Comm.—My Lord [Madam].

Con.—I have the honour to be, My Lord, Your Lordship's [Madam, Your Ladyship's] most obedient humble Servant.

The Mayors of all Corporations, with the Sheriffs, Aldermen, and Recorder of London, are styled Right Worshipful; and the Aldermen and Recorder of other Corporations, and Justices of the Peace, Worshipful: but these titles are seldom used, except in Court, or on matters relating solely to their office. The heads of Scottish Corporations are called Provosts.

AMBASSADORS, &c.

Ambassadors have Excellency prefixed to their other titles, and their accredited rank added.

Sup.—To his Excellency The Prince Esterhazy, Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary, from H. I. M. (His Imperial Majesty), the Emperor of Austria.

Sup.—To His Excellency The Honourable Lord Viscount Strangford, G. C. B., H. B. M. (His Britannic Majesty's) Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary to the Sublime Ottoman Porte.

Comm.—My Lord.

Con.—I have the honour to be, My Lord, Your Excellency's most obedient humble Servant.

The Wives of Ambassadors also have Excellency added to their other titles.

Envoys and Chargés d'Affaires are generally styled Excellency, but it is only by courtesy; none but Ambassadors have any right to the title.

Consuls have only their accredited rank added to their names, or titles if they have any.

GOVERNMENT DEPARTMENTS AND PUBLIC COMPANIES.

KING IN COUNCIL.

All applications to the King in Council, the Houses of Lords and Commons, &c., are by Petition, as follows, varying only the title:

To the King's Most Excellent Majesty in Council,

The humble Petition of A. B., &c.,
Humbly sheweth—
That your Petitioner

Wherefore your Petitioner humbly prays, that Your Majesty will be graciously pleased to
And your Petitioner, as in duty bound, will ever pray.

Commissioners of Government Departments, if they have no other title, are generally named after their office; and in conversation, Mr Commissioner, or Commissioner.

These Commissioners, and the Directors of the Bank, &c., are also often, especially by inferiors, styled Honourable, but they have no right to the distinction.

VIVIT POST FUNERA VIRTUS.—VIRTUE LIVES BEYOND THE GRAVE.

HONORANTES ME HONORABO.—THEM THAT HONOUR ME I WILL HONOUR.

A COMPENDIOUS DICTIONARY OF LAW TERMS, &c. ILLUSTRATED WITH LAW MAXIMS, TRANSLATED.

Abandonment. The relinquishing to the underwriters, under an insurance, of all the property saved from a wreck, in order to entitle the insured to claim for a total loss.

Abate. To break down, destroy, or remove; as, for instance, to abate (remove or put an end to) a nuisance.

Abduction. The unlawful taking or detention of a woman (having property in possession or expectancy) against her will, with the intention of procuring her marriage or defilement. Also the unlawful taking of an unmarried girl, under the age of sixteen years, out of the possession, and against the will of, the father, or other person having the lawful care of her, although done without force or corrupt motives. The former is a felony, and the latter a misdemeanour.

Abettor. A person who encourages or excites another to commit an offence punishable by law.

Abeyance. The fee simple of lands is in abeyance when there is no person in being in whom it can vest, so that it is in a state of expectancy, or waiting until a proper person shall appear, or the right thereto is determined. The same applies to dignities or offices.

Abjuration (oath of). An oath disclaiming any right in the pretender to the British throne, and also the jurisdiction and authority of the pope or any other foreign prince within this realm.

Abortion. The offence of procuring the miscarriage of a woman quick with child.

Abstract of Title. An epitome of the deeds and documents constituting the evidence of title to an estate.

Acceptance. The act by which a person on whom a bill of exchange is drawn undertakes to pay it at maturity. The bill of exchange itself is sometimes called, in common parlance, an acceptance.

Accessory. A person concerned in a felonious offence, although not the actual perpetrator, nor present at its performance. He may be accessory either before or after the fact.

Accommodation Bill. A bill of exchange accepted without value, for the purpose of raising money thereon by discount.

Accountant General. An officer of the Court of Chancery, in whose name the suitors' money stands at the Bank of England, and which he disposes of as the court may direct.

Account stated. An account closed or balanced.

Acknowledgment by a married woman. A ceremony gone through by a married woman to enable her to convey her interest in land, and which has been substituted for the old process of a fine.

Action. The method of demanding the enforcement of a legal right, and procuring redress for a civil injury in the courts of common law.

Act of Parliament. See Statutes.

Acts of Bankruptcy are numerous—such as keeping out of the way to avoid a creditor, &c. Upon the commission of any one of them a trader is liable to be made bankrupt by a creditor or creditors, whose debt amounts in case of one creditor to £75, if two creditors to £75, and if three creditors £100; a firm being considered as one creditor.

Addition. The title, degree, profession, or business, and also the place of abode of a person.

Adjudication. In England, the act of giving judgment, as, for instance, when a bankruptcy judge finds a party bankrupt, it is called the Adjudication. In Scotland it is applied to the law whereby a creditor attaches the property of his debtor, and has different significations according to the nature of the property attached.

Administrator. He that has the goods of a person dying without a will committed to his care, for the purpose of legal distribution. The nearest of kin is entitled to administration.

Admiralty (Court of), has cognizance of all civil (but not now, as it had formerly, of criminal) matters, arising on the high seas, or on those parts of the coast which are not within the limits of an English county.—Also of prize cases. Criminal matters are triable before the ordinary assize courts of the nearest English county.

Ad valorem. Stamp duties, the amount of which is regulated according to the value of the property, &c., are so termed.

Advocates—in the Ecclesiastical and Admiralty Courts in England, which are guided by the principles of the civil law, — the same as barristers or counsellors in the other courts. The same term is used in Scotland; the jurisprudence of which country is based on the civil law. The Faculty of Advocates is composed of the bar of Scotland, and is a kind of college, of which the Dean of the Faculty is the head. The Lord Advocate is the chief law officer of Scotland, and is somewhat analogous to our Attorney-General.

Advowson. The right of presentation to an ecclesiastical benefice. He who possesses this right is styled the patron. Advowsons are of three kinds, presentative, collative, or donative.

Affidavit. A written statement upon oath. It must be sworn before a person authorized to administer oaths; who that is, depends upon what the affidavit relates to. The same officer is not usually empowered to administer oaths in all the Courts.

ACTUS ME INVITO FACTUS NON EST MEUS ACTUS.

AN ACT WHICH I AM COMPELLED TO DO IS NOT MY ACT.

Affinity. Relation by marriage between the husband or wife and the blood relations of either; but not between the husband and wife themselves.

Affirmation. A solemn declaration in lieu of an oath, made by Quakers, Moravians, and Separatists. Until recently it was confined to them, but by a recent Act, a judge, &c., on being satisfied of the sincerity of the objection of a person (although not of the sects mentioned) to take an oath from alleged conscientious motives, may permit him or her to make an affirmation instead of taking an oath; but this is confined (as to persons other than Quakers, &c.) to civil proceedings. It does not apply to criminal matters; in such cases an oath is still required, unless a person belongs to one of the excepted sects first mentioned.

A fortiori. By so much stronger reason.

Agent. A person appointed to do an act for another. The act when performed is, in law, the act of the principal; the maxim being "qui facit per alium facit per se."

Agistment. Where cattle are taken in to pasture; from agiser, i. e. levaut and couchant.

Alderman. Literally, an elder man. In London the aldermen are magistrates chosen for life. They form a separate court, called the Court of Aldermen, and from their body the Lord Mayor must be chosen. In other cities and boroughs they are chosen from the common council—have precedence merely, but no other distinctive rights or privileges over an ordinary common councillor.

Alibi. Elsewhere. A defence by which it is proved that the accused was not at the place where the offence was committed at the time of its commission.

Alien. One born in a foreign country out of the allegiance of the queen: see 7 & 8 Vic. c. 66, which provides for certain exceptions to this rule; also mitigates the severity of the old law against aliens, and provides a cheap and easy mode for a foreigner obtaining a certificate of naturalization.

To Aliene. To convey or dispose of property to another.

Alimony. An allowance made by a husband to his wife when living apart from her: the new Divorce Court has power, the same as the old Ecclesiastical Courts had, to order the payment of alimony pending proceedings for a divorce or judicial separation.

Aliunde. Elsewhere, besides, &c.

Allegations. The pleadings in the Ecclesiastical Courts are so termed.

Allegiance. The obedience which every subject owes to his prince or liege lord.

Allocation. An allowance made on an account in the Exchequer.

Allocatur. The certificate by which a taxing master certifies the amount at which he has taxed a bill of costs.

Allodial (contradistinguished from feudal), is where lands are held free, i. e. without being subject to any fine, rent, or service.

Amicus Curie. A counsel (or by-stander), who informs the judge on a point of law, on which he is doubtful or mistaken.

Ancestor. The law distinguishes between ancestor and predecessor; the former is applied to individuals, the latter to corporations.

Ancient Demesne. A tenure of lands partaking of the properties both of copyhold and freehold.

Ancients. A grade in some of the Inns of court (the Middle Temple and Gray's Inn), and also in the Inns of Chancery.

Answer in Chancery. The most usual form of defence to a bill in Chancery. It is a written statement, and must be sworn to unless the petitioner by consent dispenses with the oath.

Apparator. A messenger that serves the process of the Ecclesiastical Court.

Appeal. The removal of a cause from an inferior into a superior court, for the purpose of impeaching the judgment of the inferior court. The chief appeal courts are the Privy Council, which reviews the decisions of the Ecclesiastical, Admiralty, and Colonial Courts, and the House of Lords, which is the final court of appeal from all the decisions of courts of law and equity in England, and of the Irish and Scotch courts.

Appearance to Action. The first formal step by a defendant in an action or suit. It is a notice that he intends to defend.

Appellant. The person appealing to a superior from the decision of an inferior court.

Appenage. The portion of the younger children of continental princes.

Appointment. A formal execution of some power or authority; as, for instance, a power to dispose of property amongst a certain class, as children or grand-children.

Appraiser. A person who values personal chattels.

Appropriation. An appropriation of a benefice is, the annexing of it to the use of some spiritual body; as a bishop or a college. The same in the hands of a layman is called an "impropriation." The appropriation of a payment means the applying of it to the discharge of a particular debt, where the creditor to whom it is made has more than one debt due from the same debtor.

Approver. A person guilty of an indictable offence, who, to obtain pardon for himself, makes a full confession, and is admitted to give evidence against his accomplices.

Arbitration. An extrajudicial method of settling matters in difference by referring them to the arbitrement or determination of persons appointed by the disputants, and termed arbitrators.

Arches Court. A court of appeal from all inferior Ecclesiastical Courts within the province of Canterbury. It derives its name from the church of St Mary-le-Bow (de Areubus), where it was formerly held: this court was always separate and distinct from the old Prerogative Court (now abolished), and, like all the other Ecclesiastical Courts, continues its jurisdiction in church matters notwithstanding the principal jurisdiction of the Ecclesiastical Courts (in divorce and testamentary matters) has been removed to the new courts.

Sir S. Lushington is the present judge of the court.

Arraignment. A term of criminal procedure. A prisoner, after having had the indictment read over to him, is commanded to state whether or not he is guilty. This proceeding is termed the arraignment.

Arrest. A legal seizure, capture, or taking of a man's person which is effected by corporeal touching, or something equivalent thereto. In civil cases a man can only be arrested under legal process. The officer cannot break open a man's outer door for the purpose of arresting him; nor can arrest on a civil process be effected on a Sunday, except after an escape.

Arrest of Judgment. Where the court stays a judgment, after verdict, on some question of law.

Arson. Felonious houseburning.

Articled Clerk. A student bound by deed to serve an attorney, preparatory to his own admission to practice.

Articles of the peace. A complaint against a person to compel him to find sureties to keep the peace.

Assault and Battery. An attempt or offer, with force and violence, to do a corporal hurt to another is an assault; an injury actually done to the person of another in an angry, revengeful, or insolent manner, be it ever so small, is a battery.

Assets. Property, whether real or personal, in the hands of an executor, &c., for the purpose of satisfying debts.

Assignee. A person to whom any real or personal property is transferred by the act of law, as an executor, an assignee of a bankrupt, &c., or by the act of party, as a purchaser of a lease.

Assignment. A transfer of any kind of property from one person to another.

Assizes. The periodical sittings of the common law judges, at the county towns, for the trials of prisoners and civil causes. See Circuits.

Assumpsit. A verbal or parol promise expressed or implied, springing out of a simple contract. The law always implies a promise to do that which a party is legally bound to perform. An action of assumpsit or promise is the remedy for breach of a parol as distinguished from a written contract.

Assurance. The securing the payment of a sum of money or other benefit on the happening of a certain event, as, for instance, the death of a person. This is the term now usually applied to life contingencies, as contradistinguished from fires, losses at sea, &c., as to which the term insurance is still used.

Attachment. A process of the Courts of Law and Equity for compelling by arrest the performance of an act, which a party is already in contempt for not performing. Also an ancient remedy open to creditors in London, and some other cities, to attach the money or goods of their debtor in the hands of a third party within the city.

Attainder. The stain or corruption of the blood of a criminal capitally condemned. See Forfeiture.

Attorney. A person appointed by another by letter or power of attorney to do anything for him in his absence.

Attorney-General. The highest law (non-judicial) officer of the crown.

Attorney-at-Law. An officer of the superior courts of law, legally authorized to transact the business of other persons—termed his clients—in those courts.

Attornment. An acknowledgment by one person that he holds lands, or is the tenant, of another, thereby creating between them the relation of landlord and tenant.

Auter Droit. When a person holds an estate not in his own right but in right of another.

Autre Vie. For the life of another.

Average. A contribution to a general loss. When, for the safety of a ship in distress, any destruction of property is incurred, all persons having goods on board contribute rateably to the loss; this is called average.

Award. The judgment or decision of an arbitrator.

Backing a Warrant. The indorsing by a justice of the peace of the county where a warrant (which has been granted by the justice of the peace of another county) is about to be executed, and is a necessary act to be done before a person can be apprehended in a county different to that in which the warrant was issued.

Bail. The sureties for the reëpearance of a person released from custody.

Bail-bond. A document under seal, by which a person becomes bail.

Bailee. An individual intrusted with the custody of goods; for instance, a carrier.

Bailiff. There are various kinds of bailiffs; the most common being those appointed by the sheriff, commonly called sheriff's officers.

Bailiwick. The jurisdiction of a bailiff, such as the High Bailiff of Westminster.

Bailment. A delivery of a thing in trust for some special object or purpose.

Bailor. The person who makes a bailment, or delivers goods to a bailee.

Banc, or Banco (sittings in). The sittings of the judges of the superior Courts of Common Law at Westminster, during term.

Banker. A person who holds the money of another, and disposes of it as the other from time to time directs.

Bank Note. A promise by a banker to pay a specified sum to the holder.

Bankrupt. A trader who is indebted in a certain amount, and has committed an act of bankruptcy. See Acts of Bankruptcy.

Bargain and Sale. A form of conveyance; but rarely now used.

Baron. A degree of nobility next to a viscount.

Base Fee. A freehold estate of inheritance, liable to be determined on the happening of a certain event.

Battel. A trial by combat, formerly allowed by the law, by which the innocence or guilt of a party was decided.

Battery. See Assault and Battery.

Bencher. A senior of the Inns of Court.

Benefice. An ecclesiastical living.

Benefit of Clergy. Certain privileges formerly enjoyed by the clergy alone; afterwards a privilege claimed by all criminals who could read, but now abolished.

Bequest. A testamentary disposition of personal estate.

Bigamy. The criminal offence of a married man or woman pretending to marry again, his wife or her husband (as the case may be) being still alive.

Bill (in Parliament). The term applied to an intended statute when passing through Parliament, prior to its becoming law.

Bill in Chancery. A printed statement of the plaintiff's case in the form of a petition to the Lord Chancellor, praying for redress. It is the first step in a suit.

Bill of Exceptions. A mode of appealing from the decision of a judge at Nisi Prius, on a point of law.

Bill of Exchange. A written order for payment of money by one person (called the drawer) upon another (termed the drawee). When the drawee has undertaken to pay the bill, which he does by writing his name across it, he is termed the acceptor. Bills of exchange are negotiable, i. e. they confer on the holder the right of suing upon it, which he could not do in the case of a mere ordinary contract, for the want of that privity which the law in ordinary cases requires between the parties to a contract. The law as to bills of exchange is governed by the Law Merchant. See Law Merchant.

Bill of Lading. A memorandum or receipt signed by the master of a ship, acknowledging the shipment of goods, which are usually made deliverable to the consignee, or his order. One part of the bill of lading is sent to the consignee by post. By indorsing the bill of lading the property in the goods is passed to the indorsee, and so from hand to hand. The bill of lading, properly indorsed, forms, in fact, the title to the goods, and without the production of which the captain would not deliver the goods.

Bill of Rights. The statute of 1 William and Mary, stat. ii. c. 2.

Bill of Sale. An assignment of goods and chattels, by writing; generally, but not necessarily, under hand and seal.

Black Rod (the gentleman usher of the), has his name from the black rod, on the top whereof sits a lion in gold, which he carries in his hand. He keeps the chapter-house door, when a chapter of the order of the Garter is sitting; he also attends on the House of Lords. He is appointed by letters patent from the crown, and his deputy is styled the yeoman usher. They are the official messengers of the Lords. They execute orders for the commitment of offenders, and assist at the introduction of peers and other ceremonies.

Bond fide. With good faith.

Bond. A written obligation, under seal. If for the payment of a sum of money upon or after the death of a person, it is then termed a post-obit bond. The person making a bond is called the obligor, and he, to whom it is given, the obligee.

Borough. A town having now, or having formerly had, corporate rights.

Borough-English. A tenure by which the youngest son inherits from the father.

Bottomry. The borrowing of money by the master on the bottom or hull of a ship: to be paid with interest, if the ship return in safety, but otherwise to be lost or forfeited.

Breach of Covenant. The doing of an act which a party has covenanted not to do, or the neglecting to do that which he has covenanted to perform.

Breach of the Peace. An act by which the public repose is disturbed, and the safety of the community, more or less, endangered.

Breach of Promise. The doing, or abstaining from doing, something contrary to an undertaking or contract.

Breach of Trust. A neglect of duty by a trustee, or person standing in a fiduciary relation, in violation of his trust.

Bread. The 3 Geo. IV. c. 106, regulates bakers in London. The 6 & 7 Wm. IV. c. 37, those in the country. These Acts contain provisions as to weight, adulteration, &c. Penalties are provided for any breach of the law, and power is given to magistrates and peace-officers, by warrant, to search bakers' premises.

Bribery. The giving or receiving any reward for corrupt purposes.

Brief. An abridgment of a client's case, for the instruction of counsel on a trial, or hearing in court.

Broker. An agent employed to buy or sell goods; a sort of middleman between vendor and purchaser. He is not, like a factor, intrusted with the possession of the articles he vends.

Brokerage. The commission paid to a broker.

Burgage Tenure. A tenure whereby houses or lands are held in certain ancient boroughs.

Burgesses. Now usually applied to members of Parliament, but properly includes all the inhabitants of a borough.

Burglary. The offence of entering a dwelling-house, in the night, with intent to commit felony.

Burial, in the churchyard, is the common right of every parishioner; but now interments in London and in other towns are prohibited, and provisions are made for the formation of cemeteries outside the towns. See 15 & 16 Vic. c. 85; 16 & 17 Vic. c. 134; 17 & 18 Vic. c. 87; 18 & 19 Vic. c. 128; 20 & 21 Vic. c. 35 and 81.

Bursar. The treasurer of a college. In Scotland it is nearly synonymous with sizar in the English universities.

By-law. A private law made by those duly authorized by charter, custom, or prescription; but such by-law must be consonant to the public laws and statutes, and for the common benefit.

Cabinet Council. This consists of the great public officers and ministers of the state, who are selected at the Queen's pleasure to form a cabinet, and are the responsible advisers of the crown.

Canon Law. A collection of ecclesiastical constitutions, definitions, and rules, derived from the ancient councils, the writings of the fathers, ordinances of popes, &c. At the Reformation it was enacted that a review should be had of the Canon Law; but that, until such review, the existing law should continue in force, except as far as the same should be repugnant to the law of the land or the Royal Prerogatives—this still remains the state of the law, such review never having been made. The canons of 1603, having been made by the clergy, and confirmed by the king, James I., alone, but not by Parliament, does not bind the laity.

Capias. A writ authorizing the arrest of a defendant in a suit. It is issued, either after judgment, or when it is satisfactorily shown that the defendant is about to leave the realm before trial. A defendant cannot be arrested for less than £20.

Capias ad satisfaciendum, or ca-sa. The writ of capias when issued after judgment: so termed because the defendant is taken to satisfy the plaintiff's demands.

Caption. The act of arresting a man. See Arrest.

Carrier. A person whose business it is to carry goods, for the proper delivery and safety of which he is legally responsible.

Casus omissus. Where anything is omitted, or not provided against by a statute, &c.

Caveat. A proceeding to prevent an act being done, such as the granting of administration, without notice to the party entering the caveat.

Caveat emptor. Let the purchaser beware. It signifies that a vendor is not bound to answer for the goodness of his wares, unless he expressly warrants them.

Certiorari. A writ for the removal of a cause from an inferior to a superior court. This writ always lies, unless where expressly taken away by statute, and herein it differs from an appeal, which can never be had unless expressly given.

Cestui que trust. He who is the real and beneficial owner of property held in trust.

Cestui que vie. The person for whose life lands are held. See Tenant pur autre vie.

Challenge. An exception taken by a prisoner against one or more jurors, who, when challenged, are set aside, if the challenge be allowed, and new ones put in their places.

Chambers. A barrister's apartments.

In the upper sit the bishops, in the lower the representatives of the clergy. In the province of York, the convocation consists of one house only. These assemblies have not sat for business since 1717. An attempt has been made recently to give vitality to them, but without effect. They still meet merely pro forma, the legislative affairs of the church being now entirely managed by Parliament.

Coparceners. Such as have equal shares in the inheritance of their ancestor; as, where a man dies intestate, having two daughters, his heiresses, they take his freehold lands as coparceners.

Copyhold. Land held by a copy of the court rolls of a manor.

Copyright. The exclusive right which the law allows an author of printing and publishing his own original work for a prescribed period, viz. the term of his natural life, and 7 years afterwards; and if such 7 years expire before 42 years from the time of the first publication, then for such 42 years: a different rule applies as to works published before the passing of the Act 5 & 6 Viet. c. 45, the 1st July, 1842, as to which see the Act.

Coram non judice. When a judge in a court of law exceeds his jurisdiction in a cause, it is said to be coram non judice.

Coroner. An officer whose duty it is to inquire into the cause by which any person came to a sudden or violent death, which must be done, before him and the jury assembled for the purpose, upon view of the body.

Corporation. A public body or company established by royal charter or Act of Parliament, such as the corporation of London, the Bank of England, the Great Western Railway Company. There are also Ecclesiastical corporations, such as deans and chapters, &c.

Costs. The expenses incurred in the prosecution or defence of legal proceedings, of which there are two kinds, those between party and party, and those between attorney and client.

DELIBERANDUM EST DIU QUOD STATUENDUM EST SEMEL.

WHAT IS RESOLVED ONCE FOR ALL SHOULD BE LONG CONSIDERED.

at the instance of any party beneficially interested in the stock.

Divorce. The legal separation of husband and wife. There are two kinds of divorce, the one absolute, the other what is now called a Judicial Separation. See the recent Statute 20 & 21 Vic. cap. 85, which takes away the jurisdiction, in matrimonial matters, from the Ecclesiastical Courts, and vests the same in a New Court, which consists of the "Judge Ordinary," and the Full Court; the latter, only, having power to grant an absolute divorce. By this Act a judicial separation (which does not enable the parties to marry again) may be obtained by husband or wife, for (1.) Adultery, (2.) Cruelty, or (3.) Desertion without cause for two years. As to an absolute Divorce, a difference takes place if it be the wife, instead of the husband, applying for it; thus, a husband can obtain an absolute divorce against his wife on the ground of adultery, but an absolute divorce by a wife against her husband can only be obtained if the husband has been guilty of (1) incestuous adultery, or (2) of bigamy with adultery, or (3) of rape, or sodomy, or bestiality, or (4) of adultery coupled with cruelty, or (5) of adultery coupled with desertion, without reasonable cause, for two years.

Doctors of Civil Law. A degree (D.C.L.) granted by our Universities of Oxford and Cambridge to such of its members as are learned in the civil law.

Doctors Commons. A college of civilians in London, near St Paul's Cathedral, where also the ecclesiastical and admiralty courts are held; but by the recent statute abolishing the probate and matrimonial jurisdiction of the ecclesiastical courts, power is given to the doctors to dissolve this college.

Doli capax. Capable of committing a crime.

Doli incapax. Incapable of committing a crime.

Enrolment. The registering of deeds as required by certain statutes; as, for instance, deeds conveying lands to charitable uses.

Entail. That inheritance whereof a man is seized to him and the heirs of his body. Tail-General is where lands and tenements are given to one, and the heirs of his body generally. Tenant in tail-special is where the gift is restrained to certain heirs of the donee's body as male or female. There is no such thing as a perpetual entail by the law of England. The way in which property is tied up in families is by repeated settlements. If in any one generation the usual settlement (which of course is the act of the parties and not of the law) should not be executed, the entailed property would be free. The property settled by the nation on Marlborough and Wellington were by special Act of Parliament vested in their heirs for ever, thus in fact creating what the common law would not permit, a perpetual entail.

Equitable Estate. The beneficial interest of a cestui que trust, the legal ownership being in a trustee.

Equitable Mortgage. The most familiar instance is the deposit (either with or without a memorandum, although it is better to have one) of the title deeds of an estate by way of security, which constitutes an equitable mortgage without the execution of any formal mortgage deed.

Equity. See Chancery.

Equity of Redemption. The right which equity gives to a mortgagor of redeeming his estate after the appointed time for payment has passed, and which right can only be barred by a foreclosure.

Error. A writ of error is a commission to judges of a superior court, by which they are authorized to examine the record, upon which a judgment was given in an inferior court, and to affirm, reverse, or vary the same, according to law.

Escheat. Is where lands, for want of heirs, or from forfeiture, escheat or fall back to the sovereign or lord of the fee as the original grantor.

Escrow. A deed delivered to a 3rd person conditionally, until something is done by the grantor. Until the condition has been performed the deed has no legal effect.

Estate. The interest which a person has in lands, or other property.

Estoppel. Where a man is precluded in law from alleging or denying a fact in consequence of his own previous act, allegation, or denial to the contrary.

Estreat. When a recognizance becomes forfeited by any of its conditions being broken, it is estreated; that is, extracted from the record, and sent up to the Exchequer, whence a process will issue to recover the penalty.

Evidence. Proof, either written or unwritten, of the facts in issue in any legal proceeding.

Examiners in Chancery. Officers appointed for the examination of witnesses, whose evidence is taken down in writing.

Exchange of Lands. A mutual grant of lands; the one in consideration of the other.

Exchequer. One of the superior Courts of common law at Westminster. In addition to its ordinary jurisdiction, which it possesses in common with the other common law Courts, it entertains all causes relating to the revenues of the Crown.

Exchequer Chamber. The Court of Appeal from the judgment of any one of the three superior Courts of law to the judges of the other two, who sit together and form the Court of Exchequer Chamber.

Excise. A tax or impost charged by government on certain commodities.

Excommunication. A punishment inflicted by the sentence of an Ecclesiastical Court debarring the offender from the sacraments, &c.

Fealty. The duty due to a lord from his tenant, pursuant to the oath taken at his admittance.

Fee-simple. That estate or interest in lands which a person holds to him and his heirs for ever. During his life he possesses over it a perfectly free and unrestrained power of disposition, and, on his death without having alienated it by deed or will, it descends to his heirs, both lineal and collateral, male and female, according to an established order of descent.

HÆREDUM APPELLATIONE VENIUNT HÆREDES HÆREDUM IN INFINITUM.

UNDER THE TITLE OF HEIRS COME THE HEIRS OF HEIRS FOR EVER.

Fee-tail. See Entail.

Felo-de-se. One who commits self-murder.

Felony. Formerly defined as comprising "all capital crimes below treason." It may now more accurately be defined as comprising all crimes occasioning a forfeiture of lands or goods, or both.

Feme-covert. A married woman. See Coverture.

Feme-sole. An unmarried woman.

Feoffment. A mode of conveyance of lands in fee, accompanied by certain solemnities. It is rarely, if ever, now used.

Feræ naturæ. Animals that are of a wild nature, such as foxes, hares, wild fowl, &c., in opposition to tame and domesticated animals.

Fiat. An order or warrant for a thing to be done or executed.

Fieri Facias. A writ of execution, by which the sheriff is commanded to levy the debt and damages of the goods and chattels of the defendant.

Finding. A finder of goods may appropriate them to his own use if he really believes when he takes them that the owner cannot be found; but if a jury should say that the finder appropriated the goods, not having (or that he could reasonably be supposed not to have had) such belief at the time of appropriation, it amounts to a theft, and can be punished criminally.

Finding a Bill. The grand jury either find or ignore the bills against prisoners; if they find a true bill, the case goes into court, and is tried.

Fine. An ancient mode of conveyance, now abolished. See Acknowledgment by a married woman. Also a penalty for an offence committed.

Fire bote. The wood which a tenant of lands is legally entitled to take for the purpose of making his fires. If he takes too much he commits waste, and is liable to an action.

Fire policy. An instrument by which an insurance company guarantees to a person, who has insured his property, the payment of a sum of money if it is injured or destroyed by fire.

First-fruits and tenths. Certain revenues arising to the Crown from ecclesiastical livings; which now form the fund called Queen Anne's Bounty, for the augmentation of poor livings.

Fixtures. This term is generally used to denote those personal chattels which, though annexed to the freehold of demised premises, a tenant is nevertheless entitled to remove. They consist of trade fixtures, and of those put up for the ornament or convenience of the premises.

Foreclosure. The barring the equity of redemption on mortgages. It is a proceeding in Chancery which gives the mortgagor six months either to pay off the mortgage or be forever afterwards barred.

Foreign Bill of Exchange. A bill drawn by a person abroad and accepted in England, or vice versâ.

Forfeiting recognizances. When a person who has entered into recognizances, fails to comply with their conditions, the same are forfeited or estreated into the Exchequer. See Estreat.

Forfeiture. A punishment consequent upon the commission of certain criminal offences or illegal acts. Thus, a person guilty of treason or murder forfeits all his property both real and personal; and a person guilty of any felony less than murder, forfeits his personalty; in these cases the Crown takes the offender's property.

Forgery. The crime of counterfeiting a signature, seal, or mark; or the fraudulent alteration of a writing to the prejudice of another.

Formâ pauperis. Where a party is not worth £5, the Courts of Law and Equity will permit him to sue in formâ pauperis, i. e. without paying any fees to counsel or attornies, or the fees of Court.

Franchise. A royal privilege to which a subject is entitled—as a fair, a market, a free warren, a park.

Fraud. A dishonest and illegal artifice by which undue advantage is taken of another, or by which the interests of that other are unjustly prejudiced. Fraud strikes at the root of every transaction, and vitiates every contract, whether by record, deed, or otherwise.

Welsh Mortgage. A mortgage in which there is no redemption-day fixed, thereby giving the mortgagor a perpetual right of redemption.

Will. A will is the legal written declaration of a man's intentions of what he wills to be performed after his death with reference to his disposition of his property. It must be in writing signed by the testator and attested by two witnesses, who must not only be present and see the testator sign, but must themselves subscribe the will as witnesses in the presence of the testator and of each other. Without these formalities the will is invalid. A codicil is a kind of addenda or supplement to a will. Its execution and attestation must be attended with the same formalities as the will itself.

Will, estate at. An estate in lands held at the will of the landlord and tenant, and determinable at the pleasure of either party. Such a holding is very rare now, the law generally construes undefined holdings into tenancies from year to year.

Winding-up Acts. Certain Acts passed from time to time, commencing with the Act of 1848, providing for the winding up of the affairs of Joint Stock Companies, and the assessment of the liabilities, or the division of the Assets (as the case may be) between or amongst all the shareholders, or, as they are called in these acts, "Contributories."

Writ. A sort of mandatory letter from the Queen, commanding some particular act to be done or omitted.

Writ of Inquiry. See Inquiry.

Year Books, are books containing the reports of decided cases in the Courts of Law, from the beginning of the reign of Edward II. to the end of Edward III., and from the beginning of the reign of Henry IV. to the end of Henry VIII.

ABSTRACT OF THE PRINCIPAL TAX ACTS.

INHABITED HOUSE DUTY (Great Britain.)

On inhabited houses of the value of L. 20 per annum or upwards, if used for the sale of goods, the shop or warehouse being on the ground floor, or for the retail of beer, wines, or spirits; or if occupied by any person carrying on the business of an hotel-keeper, inn-keeper, or coffee-house keeper, although not licensed to sell therein by retail ale, wine, or other liquors; or if occupied by a tenant or farm-servant for husbandry purposes only, for every 20s. of annual value . . . L. 0 0 6
If occupied for any other purposes 0 0 9

Tenements, or parts of tenements, occupied for purposes of trade only, are exempt from duty, although a servant or other person may dwell in such tenement for its protection.

INCOME TAX (United Kingdom.)

This tax came into operation in 1842, and was modified in 1853. The tax was collected under five heads or schedules. A. comprising the assessment upon lands, houses, tithes, manors, mines, quarries, canals, iron-works. B. profits from the occupying of lands, &c. C. dividends on public annuities and other securities. D. profits and gains of trade. E. salaries, pensions, &c.

ADDITION ARGUES THE LESS EXTENT.

Abstract of Tax Acts.

879

Yearly Incomes of L.150 and upwards—

For every twenty shillings of the annual value or amount, during the term of two years, from the 5th of April 1853, the yearly duty of . . . L.0 0 7
And for two years from 5th of April 1855, the yearly duty of . . . 0 0 6
And for three years from 5th April 1857, the yearly duty of . . . 0 0 5

Yearly Incomes of L.100 and under L.150—

For every twenty shillings of the annual value or amount, during the term of seven years from the 5th of April 1853, the yearly duty of . . . 0 0 5

And for the occupation of lands, tenements, or hereditaments (other than a dwelling-house occupied distinct from a farm of lands), for every twenty shillings of the annual value, during the first-mentioned term of two years, the yearly duty of 3½d. in England, and 2½d. in Scotland and Ireland; and during the said further term of two years, the yearly duty of 3d. in England, and 2½d. in Scotland and Ireland; and during the said further term of three years, the yearly duty of 2½d. in England, and 1½d. in Scotland and Ireland. The Property and Income-tax then to cease.

In 1866 the duty was continued at 4d. in the pound, and for occupiers of farms at 2d. in the pound on the rent in England, and 1½d. in Scotland and Ireland. Persons whose income from every source is under L.100 are exempt. A deduction of L.60 to be allowed for incomes below L.200 a year, and balance taxed at 4d. in the pound. The expenses of the Abyssinian expedition caused a temporary augmentation of the rate, but it was afterwards reduced, and in 1870 the 4d. tax was regranted. In 1872 it was reduced to 3d. In 1874-5 it is 2d. in the pound. For occupiers of farms it is 1d. in the pound on the rent in England, and ¾d. in Scotland and Ireland. Persons whose whole income from every source is less than L.100 are exempt. A deduction of L.80 a year is allowed from incomes below L.300 a year, the balance being taxed at 2d. in the pound.

For every hackney carriage drawn by two horses one-third above the rates and fares herein-before mentioned.

The fares to be paid according to distance or time, at the option of the hirer, to be expressed at the commencement of the hiring; if not otherwise expressed, the fare to be paid according to distance.

No driver shall be compellable to hire his carriage for a fare to be paid according to time between eight o'clock in the evening and six in the morning.

When more than two persons shall be carried inside any hackney carriage, 6d. is to be paid for each person above two for the whole hiring, in addition to the above fares. Two children under ten years of age to be counted as one adult person.

When more than two persons shall be carried inside any hackney carriage with more luggage than can be carried inside the carriage, a further sum of 2d. for every package carried outside the said carriage is to be paid by the hirer in addition to the above fares.

RATES OF POSTAGE.

LETTERS FOR DELIVERY IN THE UNITED KINGDOM.

For a letter not above 1 oz.	1d.
" " 1 oz. but not above 2 oz.	1½d.
" " 2 oz.	2d.
" " 4 oz.	2½d.
" " 6 oz.	3d.
" " 8 oz.	3½d.
" " 10 oz.	4d.
" " 12 oz.	4d.

A letter above the weight of 12 oz. is liable to a postage of 1d. for every ounce, beginning with the first ounce: thus, a letter weighing between 14 and 15 oz. must be prepaid 1s. 3d.

Letters sent unpaid are chargeable on delivery with double postage.

No Inland letter packet may be above 18 inches in length, 9 inches in width, and 6 inches in depth.

REGISTERED LETTERS.

Letters, books, and book-packets, passing between any two places in the United Kingdom, and to the British Colonies, United States, Germany, Italy, and Switzerland, on which the ordinary postage has been prepaid in stamps, can be registered on prepayment of a fee of 4d. affixed in stamps.

Registered letters must not be dropped into the Letter Boxes, but must be presented at the Post Office counter, and a receipt obtained for it.

Any letter or packet marked "Registered," dropped into the letter box, will be charged a double registration fee.

BOOK POST.

The postage is one halfpenny for every 2 oz. or part of that weight. No book packet may exceed 5 lbs. in weight, or exceed 18 inches in length, 9 inches in width, and 6 in depth.

POST CARDS.

Official halfpenny Post Cards, with letters written on the back, may be transmitted between places in the United Kingdom. The Cards may be obtained at the various Post Offices, in packets of not less than a dozen, for 6d.

INLAND NEWSPAPERS.

Under the "Post Office Act, 1870," any newspaper printed and published in the United Kingdom at intervals of not more than seven days, and registered at the General Post Office, may pass through the United Kingdom as a newspaper for a postage of one halfpenny.

No newspaper can now be sent through the post a second time for the original postage, a fresh payment being required for each transmission.

Every newspaper must be so folded as to admit of the title being readily inspected.

LONDON POSTAL DISTRICTS.

London and its suburbs are divided into eight postal districts, as follows, viz.:—

Eastern (E.)	South Eastern (S.E.)
East Central (E.C.)	South Western (S.W.)
Northern (N.)	Western (W.)
North Western (N.W.)	Western Central (W.C.)

That portion of each district within three miles of the General Post Office, St Martin's le Grand, is termed the town delivery, and the remainder the suburban delivery.

There are eleven deliveries of letters daily within the town limits, except the East Central, which has twelve deliveries daily, and the suburban districts have six deliveries daily.

DOUBLE THE HOUR OF SUNRISE GIVES THE LENGTH OF NIGHT.

RULE.—Find the Dominical Letter for the year, in the First Table; and note, that in Leap-years there are two Dominical Letters, the first for January and February, the second for the other months; then in this Second Table, the days of the week under the Dominical Letter will be those for the required year.

N.B. New Style commenced in Roman Catholic Countries generally in 1582; but was not adopted in England till 1752. Old Style is still used in Russia.

MEN OFTEN ACT LIES, WITHOUT SPEAKING THEM.

LIVING IS NOT LENGTH OF DAYS. BUT RIGHT USE OF THEM.
